The Vindagua is a student publication of Lee University located in Cleveland, Tennessee. Volume 62 was printed by Herff Jones Publishing Company in Montgomery, Alabama, with a press run of 3,000 copies. Students purchased books as a part of school fees for $40 dollars. The 284 pages were completed using 4 eMacs. Pages were designed in Pagemaster, a Herff Jones Template, using Indesign 6.0. Photos were scanned on a Microtec scanner by the editors. Geoffrey Bass served as the Herff Jones Representative. The cover is a litho stock with matte lamination and a 4-color process. Copy and captions were 8, 10, and 12, respectively, and the primary font was AJH Schnittger.

Editors' Note

If one had to choose a word to sum up this yearbook, it would by group consensus be "change." Not only did this year bring about the transition of a new editor-in-chief, but it also ushered in a completely new staff. To add to the mix, the Communications Department graciously provided four new OS10 computers and a new Indesign program for the benefit of the book. Even when the Vindagua had a successful fall semester there were new editors to train in the spring and the whole learning process seemed to begin from the ground up. Through it all though, some things never changed. Photographers still ran around frantically trying to get pictures at the last minute, late night vigils in the Publication Lab were held before every deadline, and on Tuesday afternoons the conference room was the scene of valiant attempts to produce new ideas for the 62nd edition of the Lee University Vindagua. The usual pleas for a "savior" were echoed constantly in the offices of the advisors, and the momentary desperation was always duly noted and cared for. Yet, despite the usual setbacks and stresses, somehow the book came together again, and a constant audible sigh was heard coming from the direction of the pub lab . . .

-The Editors

Contributors

DR. CHRIS COULTER

Without the superior copy editing of Dr. Coulter, this book would have seen a lot more typos than one would imagine. His red pen was often the most hated, yet the most useful tool the Vindagua had.

LINDSAY MORRIS

If there was an article to be written on any topic from convocation to seniors saying their good-byes, Lindsey was the girl to get the job done. Her hard work and polished writing skills kept this year's Vindagua a step ahead.

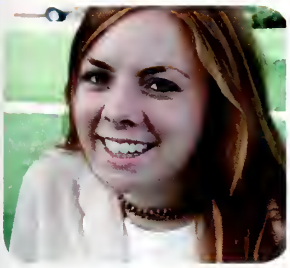
DR. JOEL KAILING

Dr. Kailing would often receive calls from the editor-in-chief and other editors about the printer not functioning properly or one of the eMacs miraculously opening in OS 9.2 (instead of 10). Yes, there were some computer misunderstandings, but everyone learned a lot more on how to troubleshoot Macintosh, thanks to Dr. Kailing.

TY BROWN

With a witty sense of humor and a willingness to lend a hand, Ty got the story written and delivered on time, every time. His dedication helped give the sports section a personal side. This intrepid writer always displayed the lives of Lee's coaches and athletes in a new and interesting light.

Photographers



ASHLEY SOULE

Ashley, a senior Communications major, served as the Vindagua sports section editor in the 2001-2002 school year, and returned to the staff this spring as the head photographer. Ashley has always enjoyed taking pictures, but has only practiced photography for the last two years. After graduation she plans to teach English as a second language to elementary school children in Chile.

ERIN BOARDWINE

As a veteran Vindagua photographer, Erin took charge of the Photography staff in the Fall of 2002. Though she had to balance an internship at Hughs Photography and her Vindagua work, Erin still managed to shoot the complicated profiles section, delegate work to the other photographers, and graduate in December.

JOHNNY HUGHES

Johnny was responsible this year for shooting the cover photos. His experience and willingness to help was a great encouragement to the staff photographers.

ADAM DELEZENNE

Many of the Spring pictures would not have been taken if it were not for Adam's dedication. Stepping up to complete a good portion of photo requests, Adam was an invaluable asset to the Vindagua's photography team during the spring semester. Amidst the stress that can accompany one's last semester of college, this senior Bible and Theology major took on the responsibility to shoot pictures for the yearbook simply for the experience and enjoyment he has for photography.

GLEN HODGES

Glen's interest in photography prompted him to take pictures for the yearbook during the fall semester. His creativity brought a subtle and effective style to his photos seen in many of the lifestyle section pages.

VICTORIA SWISHER

Victoria's role on the photography team could be summed up in three words: excellent, reliable and joyful. If there was a deadline and a photo request that needed to be completed, Victoria was there fulfilling her role with a smile and a willingness to get the job done. She contributed photos for a variety of sections in the yearbook.

PROFILES PROFILES PR

WHAT IS THIS SECTION ABOUT? The profiles section was actually a new section which started to appear in the Vindagua in the 2000 edition. Being one of the most popular sections of the book, a lot of time is spent each year in deciding who to profile, conducting extensive interviews, and doing numerous photo shoots.

OFILES PROFILES PROF

the section editors...

Eric Biddy, a first year member of the Vindagua, tackled the challenge of the profiles section this year. Amid his busy academic schedule consisting of a double major in Theology and English, he had to choose among the entire student body and faculty twelve figures who had a unique story to tell. In addition to completing his section he brought a lighter attitude to the stressed out staff, usually causing tense meetings to end in laughter.

Eric Biddy

When he stepped down as chairman of the Communications Department last year and then moved his office to the publications lab, Dr. Melton was planning on playing a larger role in the Vindagua. Always there to entertain questions ranging from the ridiculous to the technical, he also assisted in the compiling of the profiles copy, layout designs, and moral support for the staff.

Dr. M. Melton

As a third year Vindagua section editor, Courtney assumed the position of editor-in-chief this past fall. While gracefully pushing deadlines, she was also pursuing a degree in English and making plans to attend law school after graduating. When things got stressful, Courtney gave her staff a lot of extra encouragement to keep them moving. This section is proof of her dedication and willingness to help out.

hannah matis

HANNAH MATIS WAS UNDAUNTED BY THE LOCAL FOODS in India, Israel, England, Italy, France, and Thailand, but when it came to the South's ambrosial grits, she found herself overmatched. Her reasoning, to the untrained Southerner, seems sound, "What is a grit? It seems that grits is the plural of grit, but what is a grit?" This is a fine example of the inquisitive nature of Hannah's mind. This same inquisitive nature has taken her to many places all over the world for a variety of reasons. She has traveled out of scholastic, ministerial, and pleasure motivations, thereby allowing herself to breathe the studies and passions most students struggle through in stale dormitories and basement classrooms. Perhaps no trip she has taken has involved a cultural change overwhelmingly more drastic than her three-day trek from Maine to Cleveland, TN, four years ago. At Lee, Hannah has cultivated her love for history and literature, majoring in English and History. She has been active in the honor's societies of both of these departments and has enjoyed contributing to Lee's arts magazine, The Lee Review. She has also participated in the Semester in Cambridge trip and the New England Studies Tour. Hannah is perhaps one of the few students who consider her excellent chances at graduate school a contingency plan. She hopes to make a living with her writing. She will doubtlessly be aided in that endeavor by her travels and experiences which now, after three years at a distance, do [illegible] ea[illegible]

chris phillips

CHRIS PHILLIPS HAS DEDICATED HIS musical talent to the Lord, and Chris happens to have an incredible amount of talent to dedicate. He began playing piano by ear in his home church in Douglas, Georgia, at age four. He has been redefining boundaries ever since. In elementary school he was deemed by an eight-year old consensus to be "Mr. Music." Several times in his childhood he lived up to his nickname with such exploits as performing with the world-famous pianist Dino and playing at the Church of God General Assembly at age eleven. In the Church of God talent competition, Teen Talent, Chris has three first-place trophies: two for piano performance and one for electronic keyboard. When asked about these accomplishments, he chuckles and replies that the credit belongs to God. Danny Murray, Director of Voices of Lee, saw Chris play in Teen Talent and asked him to come to Lee to play for Voices. Ever since, Chris has sung and played with Voices, using his remarkable piano ability and perfect pitch to minister across the country. He is a piano performance major and enjoys arranging music himself. After graduation, he plans to minister through music in whatever way God leads him.

THE MELLOW VIBRATO OF DR. JIM Burns' baritone is easily one of the most recognizable sounds at Lee University. But don't let the voice fool you. Jim Burns is not just a man of many voices, he's also a man of many hats. As director of Lee's Graduate Studies in Music he is both teacher and administrator. He can often be found leading worship in chapel services. In the past, he has been a director for both Campus Choir and Lee Singers. As an accomplished vocalist, Dr. Burns has peformed a great deal outside the campus in a wide variety of productions, such as Handel's "Messiah," Haydn's "Creation," Brahm's "Requiem" and a host of others. He has taken his vocal talents to exotic locations all over the world. Indeed, one of his more endearing qualities, say those who know him, is that one never knows when—or where—Dr. Burns will burst into song. One hat he has been wearing more and more lately is that of a Methodist circuit riding preacher, a role he developed for community history. "Preacher" Burns can be seen at local museum events as well as in dramatic productions that also feature his wife Doris, with whom he has collaborated on several projects.

su-jin bae

SU-JIN BAE EARNS HER NICKNAME SUNNY EVERYDAY. AS soon as people meet her, they know how she earned the nickname. If they really get to know her, then they realize just how remarkable the nickname and the person are. Sunny was born in Korea. Her mother was a Christian and her father's background was Buddhist, which is the dominant belief system in Korea. She did not always plan on coming to America, but she began her journey here before even she realized it. When Sunny was in middle school, she went with friends to a prayer mountain operated by the largest Christian church in the world, which is based in Korea. The pastor asked everyone who was interested in missionary work to stand up. Sunny stood, though she had never considered mission work before. She has remembered her promise and is beginning her mission work here at Lee. Sunny came to Lee from a sister school in Korea, where she studied English for ten hours a day. She carefully cultivated the study habits necessary for an international student to navigate the difficulties of a second-language curriculum. Some of the primary difficulties Sunny faced when coming to America were financial issues. However, God resolved them for her through scholarships and relationships with Godly people who have helped her such as Dr. Cliff Schimmels and Harriet and Bob Taylor of Westmore Church of God. Sunny says of the Taylor's, "They are my American parents. They treat me like a daughter." After graduation, Sunny plans to show the love of God that she has seen in the Taylors and Dr. Schimmels to the world, doing missions work such as teaching English as a second language and ministering to single mothers, bringing sunlight wherever she sees darkness. thomas bland

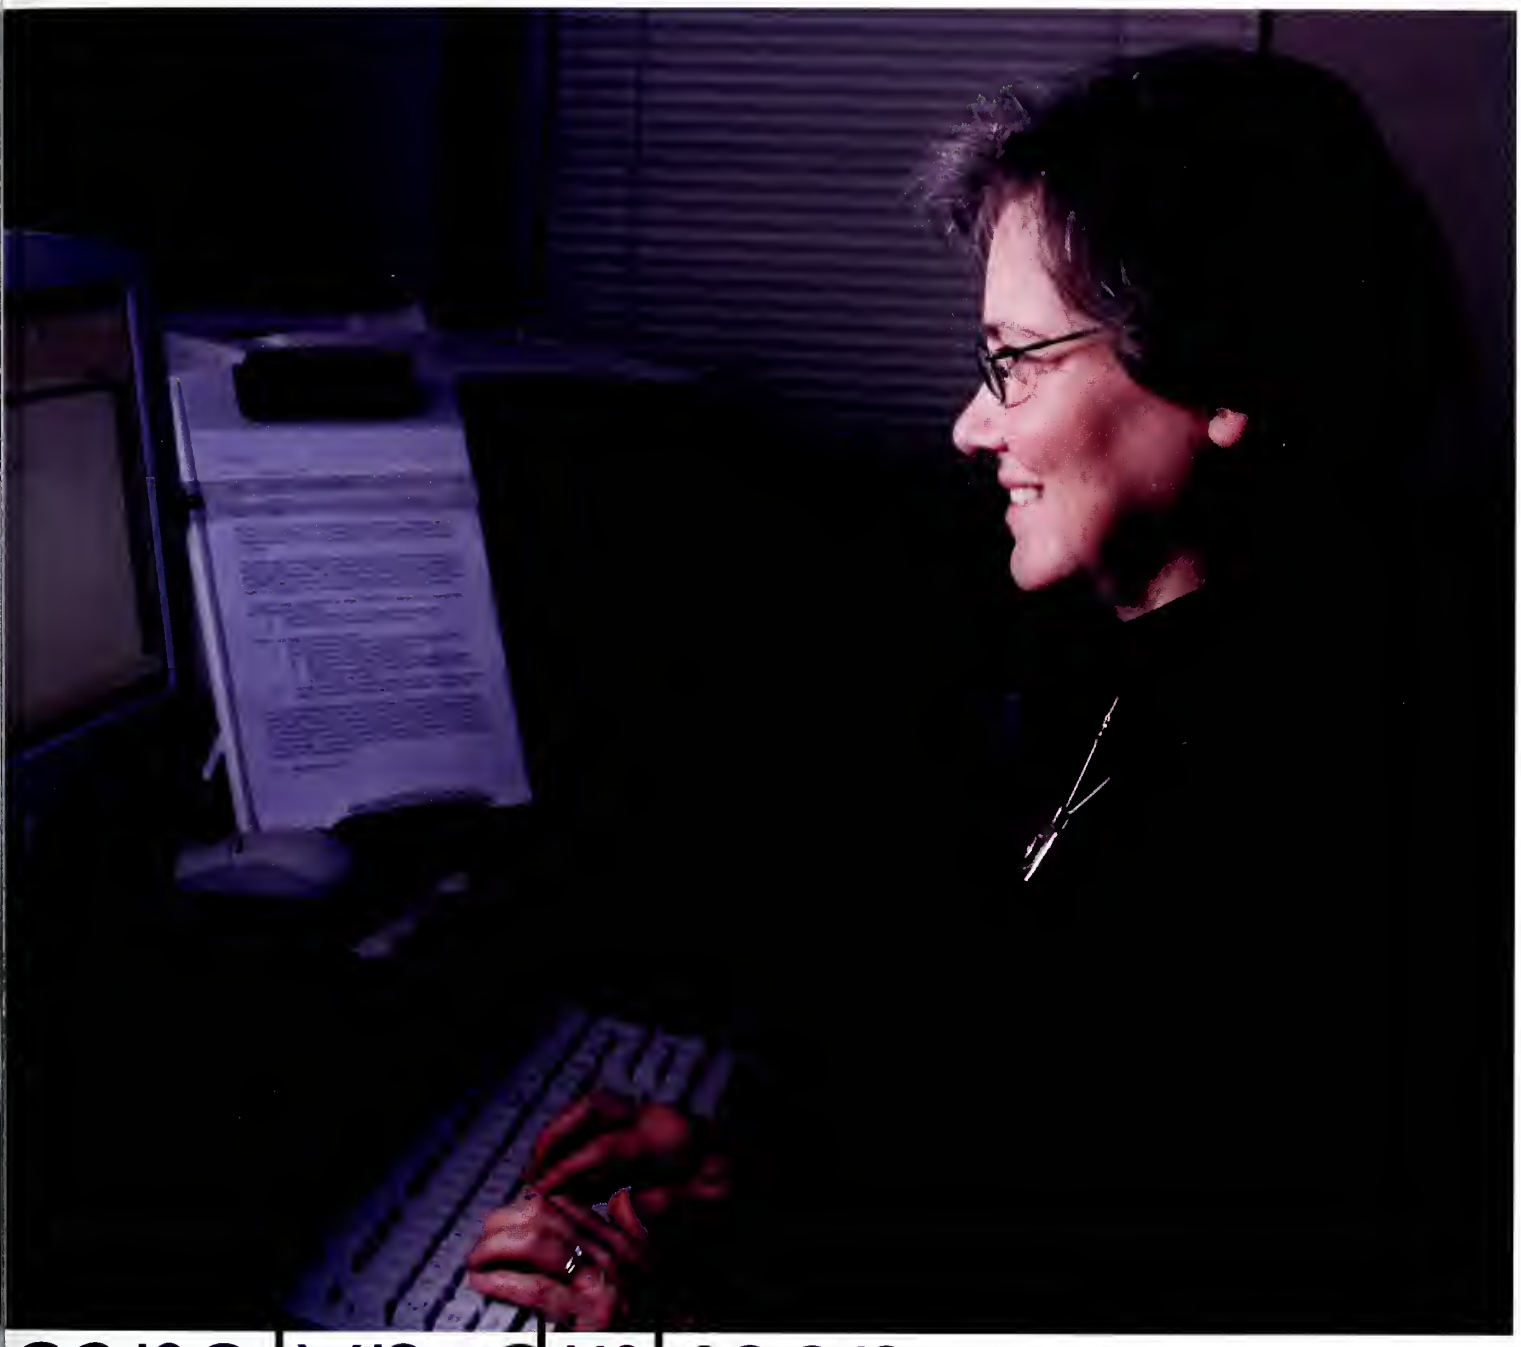
"HEY, MAN! I AIN'T SEEN YOU ALL day!" For many Lee students these words are strikingly familiar. They have become the patented trademark of one of the campus' favorite staff members, known far and wide simply as "Thomas." Thomas was all but canonized by the residential staff at the formerly male dorm Atkins-Ellis, but their loss this year has been the great gain in the lives of the students at the new Bowdle-O'Bannon Hall, where the cheerful custodian currently works. Students get more than emptied trash cans from Thomas, however. He offers tips for boxing (from his own boxing days), moves for disco-dancing, insight on where to find the best fried chicken, as well as information on the Special Olympics with which he is annually involved. As he glides through campus like Hermes on a bicycle, students watch for his Harry Potter backpack and wait to hear, "Hey, man!" stories by Eric Biddy and Dr. M. Melton, layout by Courtney Rose Gutenschwager, photos by Erin Boardwine.



carolyn dirksen

DR. CAROLYN DIRKSEN, LEE'S FIRST FEMALE VICE PRESIDENT, HAS A PASSION FOR EDUCATION THAT EXTENDS beyond the Cleveland campus. A respected linguist, Dr. Dirksen is also academic advisor to the English Language Institute/China (ELIC), an organization committed to spreading the Gospel through educational opportunities to areas that would otherwise have little exposure to either. In her role as an international educator, Dr. Dirksen has traveled all over the world, including China, Cambodia, Laos, Thailand, and North Korea. In some of these countries, Dr. Dirksen has met with high-ranking officials to develop English programs for their citizens. In her role as Vice President for Academic Affairs, Dr. Dirksen hardly seems to take a break from her larger-scale tasks, yet remains a consistent favorite among students as a classroom teacher, a calling she's pursued at Lee for more than 30 years.

henry moyo

TWENTY- FIVE YEARS AGO, HENRY MOYO WAS A PROFESsional soccer player in Zimbabwe. However, his real job was leading a militant revolutionary group known as Z.A.P.U., the Zimbabwe African People's Union. This organization is about as far from Lee University as one can get, but it was close enough for Christ. Students who meet Henry Moyo today would never think that the quiet man who teaches their Christian Thought class, or the slightly less quiet man they see coaching the men's soccer team, had such a remarkable and violent past. Coach Moyo's journey to Lee has been a good deal longer and at times more frightening than most teachers' and students'. Near the height of his power as a leader of Z.A.P.U., a young Christian persistently, despite Coach Moyo's occasionally violent protestations, showed him the love of Christ. This young man eventually helped Moyo overcome the mentality of Christianity being the religion of his people's oppressors, and Moyo accepted Christ. Reflecting on his past, he says, "A Christian who has witnessed severe oppression has a real concern for, and interprets his or her faith, in light of justice and a higher respect for human dignity." the istomin sisters

UNLIKE MANY IN THE United States today, sisters Susanna and Natalya Istomin didn't need a national tragedy to make them aware of the precious nature of their freedom. The Istomin family is from the former Soviet Union and they learned first-hand just how strong faith and courage in people can be. Their family witnessed persecution under a regime that forbade the open practice of Christianity. Eventually they found a way out of the U.S.S.R. and made it safely to America where they have been enjoying their freedom to worship ever since. Today, both sisters are at Lee, Natalya studying as a freshman and Susanna working in the Deacon Jones Dining Hall. Stories by Eric Biddy and Dr. M. Melton. Photos by Erin Boardwine. blaine hamilton

"THE CHALLENGE IS TO SIT IN CLASS TALKING ABOUT TOPICS ... AND THEN LET THEM GET INTO your heart so that you can act on them." So says Blaine Hamilton, president of Pioneers for Christ, one of the longest-lived and consistenly active ministry groups on campus at Lee University. The group was founded decades ago by Charles Beach, who passed away last year after a long and distinguished career. Hamilton, a Bible and Theology major with a GPA just under a 4.0, understands the need to keep the head and the heart in balance. While maintaining excellence as a student, he has pursued active ministry just as hard, staying true to the vision of Beach and the other leaders of PFC who came before him. "The key is to give everything you can to everything," Hamilton says, "but most importantly to Christ." Stories by Eric Biddy and Dr. M. Melton. Photos by Erin Boardwine and Johnny Hughes. muna sabbah

MUNAH SABBAH NEVER THOUGHT THAT leaving her family in Israel would bring her closer to them in other ways. In her teen years, the Israeli-born Christian Arab began to feel that she would not stay in the Holy Land, but the process that would make it happen was completely unexpected. Her older sister had been corresponding with a male American penpal for three years. The shocker came when the penpal came for a visit to Israel and then took Munah's sister back with him to the United States to marry her. At her sister's request, Munah came, too. Munah finished her high school education, and though she had competitive scholarship opportunities elsewhere, she chose to come to Lee. Not only has she brought with her a rich culture and heritage, she now counts her sister as her best friend.

AFTER GRADUATING FROM LEE COLLEGE IN MAY 1960, RUTH CRAWFORD (LATER LINDSEY) and some female colleagues decided to enter the mission field in Brazil, in spite of the fact that the Church of God did not at that time sponsor unmarried female missionaries. She would stay for thirteen and a half difficult years, sharing the Gospel and helping to plant a Bible school that would in time become the Church of God Seminary for Brazil. When she returned to the United States in December, 1973, many would have thought she had done enough for one lifetime. Not so for Ruth Lindsey. She went back to school for an M.A. in English and two years later commenced a second lifetime of teaching at Lee. The transition back to life and learning in the United States was not easy. "It was very hard," Ms. Lindsey remembers. "I was so used to speaking Portuguese I was trying to translate my teachers' English lectures into Portuguese so that I could understand them." She perservered, however, and became one of the most beloved teachers on campus. Now, after 27 years in her second life, Ms. Lindsey has elected to "retire." Characteristically, however, she is on her way back to Brazil, where she plans to resume her former role as a missionary, working again at the school she helped build. story by Eric Biddy and Dr. M. LIFESTYLES LIFESTYLES

WHAT IS THIS SECTION ABOUT? The lifestyles section has traditionally been a heterogenious mixture of everything that has to do with the lifestyles of the student population. This means that everything can be included in here from the trendy fashions of the year to the events of various Greek clubs.

the section editors...

As the new Lifestyles section editor of the Vindagua, Cindy set out to accomplish the admirable task of including everyone that she could in her section of the book. She could always be found doing interviews, surveys, collecting information, or attending numerous events that were covered in her section. Making the pages as personal and relevant to as much of the student body as possible became more than just an attempt, though. As the year progressed, this senior Communications major showed immeasurable ability when it came not just to meeting deadlines, but to producing quality work along the way. According to Cindy, " I enjoy working for the Yearbook because of the opportunity to learn more about layout and graphic design. It also increases my interviewing and writing skills. Because of the yearbook I am concidering a career in the publishing industry."

Cindy Costa

Hailing from Soldotna, Alaska, Elisabeth Schirmers is a Communications major with an emphasis in advertising, and an art minor. She finds the opportunity to serve God through her participation in the drama team, Acts of God, and through her personal passions of oil painting and drawing. Since her first year at Lee she has been commissioned to do several painting projects, including working on a mural for a local bed and breakfast and transforming an entire playroom into a tree-filled landscape. Elisabeth also has a passion for writing music for the piano, having recently completed a total of ten works. During her first year on staff with the Vindagua, she took the Lifestyles section by storm, helping to transform ordinary pages into sophisticated displays of professional style.

IN REMEMBRANCE

The flags stood at half mast on September 11, 2002, as people interrupted their busy lives to honor the memory of those who were lost in the terrorist attacks that occurred only one year ago. It was not a day of fear and uncertainty, but one of remembrance. Memorial services, parades, and prayer meetings were held in towns across the country. The Cleveland community and Lee University held their own special events to memorialize the day. The festivities sponsored by Bradley Memorial Hospital began at 6:30 p.m. with a parade through downtown Cleveland to honor the city's firemen, police officers, military personnel, and medical responders. All were invited to join the parade that ended at the Village Green, where a service was held. Voices of Lee, a children's choir, and the pastor of First Baptist Church were all featured at the event. Sara Laboranti, a Lee University senior, said that the event was "a happy moment for such a sad day. Cleveland tried to bring the best out of a horrible situation." Lee also held its own candlelight service in the ampitheater. The service included speeches from students and faculty who were personally affected by the attacks. Their stories brought new insight to the events of that day and the rescue efforts. After their testimonials, Dr. Conn began the lighting of the candles, as he lit his from a torch, and the names of all who lost their lives were shown. Although it was a sad moment, for junior Nicole Macaluso, "The beautiful candlelight symbolized a spirit of hope, unity, and remembrance."

September 11, 2001, is a day that will live on forever in the memory of Americans. As three passenger planes crashed into the American symbols of prosperity and protection, this country changed and would never be the same. One year later, the impact the terrorist attacks have made on America is reflected in the changes that have been made in the people of this country. U.S. citizens no longer think that they are above reality, and they now know the meaning of unity. For those that mourn the loss of loved ones, the prayers of the masses offer comfort. As for the rest, each person must try to get on with "normal" life. For Lee University, normal life means classes, tests, and extracurricular activities, but this community did not go untouched. Different students were affected in different ways. Some found a new appreciation for family and friends, while others realized the importance of forgiveness. Taking a look back 365 days, students and faculty try to make sense of their world.

"I was in my car when the first reports came. Having been in the towers several times, my initial response was "how could anyone be misguided enough to accidently crash into such massive buildings?" But when the second plane hit I knew immediately this was not an accident. I went home, and then my wife called to me that the tower was falling. I didn't believe her until I came and saw the truth. I think the whole day was a day of disbelief. I thought to myself, "This is this generation's Pearl Harbor." Our nation initially turned toward spirituality because of the magnitude of the tragedy, but since then its interest has dropped significantly. Now we're a lot more suspicious of people who are not like us, and I am concerned that our nation will lose its appreciation and openness for ethnic diversity. Yet personally, all the amazing stories of 9-11 have renewed my belief that there are some very fine people in the world, willing to see others through to the end. And every morning before I leave I make sure I let my family know I love them."

"I was still in my pj's when a friend knocked on my apartment door with the news. We turned on the TV in time to see the second plane hit. I was shocked, then, but now it makes perfect sense. Our own injustice makes us vulnerable. But I think it's good that we are more a part of the global village now."

"I was on the way to a soccer game when we heard on the radio that something was happening in New York. The bus was full various reactions. I was scared, and I couldn't help thinking "what if it reaches here?" The game was called off after a few phone calls, and the bus turned around to head home. I feel that a lot of problems could have been prevented by our government a long time ago if it had just woken up. No one cared about unity before 9-11, and now we have spent so much time mourning that it's been hard to see the good. It has been a year. Yes, let's mourn for those lost, but now honor their memory by being grateful for life and living it to the fullest."

"I was in General Psychology, as a teacher's assistant, when the rumors swept through the Dixon Center. Just then a staff worker came on stage with the announcement. The whole auditorium, around 400 students, fell eerily silent. A few cries could be heard, but everyone was stunned. I couldn't believe it could be true. I'm sad that it happened but I think that, since then, the event has been too dramaticised. It has made many people superficial in their patrioticm. I find it saddening that tragedy doesn't concern us so much until it hits home. We are self-centered, but we are resilient."

AMENA SMITH

"We have traded one idol for another: post–modernism for patriotism." –Royce Atchley

"At the corner of Keith and Inman the traffic was stopped. Everyone was staring up at the huge Village Green monitor, watching the tragedy. It was the first time I had seen a visual of it. In disbelief, the hope that it was just an accident filled me. For a time I couldn't hear a plane passing overhead without wondering if something awful was about to happen. Looking back, I am now more aware that the ability of humans to kill, to maime, and to injure has no limit. The innocents were simply going to work to provide for their families, just like me. It makes me wonder what life will be like for my children, when they reach my age. It's hard to imagine."

DEWAYNE BELEW

Lee Alumnus and Media Director, Bradley Memorial

"I am a E-4 specialist in the Army National Guard where I have served for over six years. When I first heard about the attacks, I was in my broadcast journalism class at Tri-County Technical College in South Carolina. There were some students in the hall who were talking about planes crashing into the World Trade Center. At first, I thought that the the attack was an accident; that a plane was extremely off course and just grazed the top of one of the buildings or something. When I found out that it had actually been a terrorist attack, I thought that it was sad that three different planes were high-jacked at the same time on the same day, and only one was diverted from its original target. The lax security is really sad. From there, my concerns shifted to being sent overseas.

In the first couple of months after that attack, I was very worried about being sent over to fight. When you see those buildings falling and all those people dead, it's really sad, but then you think, "Well hey, I'm in the military and if they send people to go find Osama bin Laden, then I might be one of them." Chances are that something may actually happen to you if you're sent over there.

The role of the National Guard is to support the military when there's not enough active personnel to carry-out an operation, or if the operation is going to last over six months or a year. After the attacks, the primary role of the people in our unit was to police airports on a volunary basis. Because I was in school, and it was a six month commitment, I was not able to volunteer for duty. There were troops from other National Guard units sent overseas, though. They are doing everything from journalism duties to cooking to actually going out on the hunt for bin Laden.

I believe the initial reation and the effort America made by going into Afgahnistan and going after Osama bin Laden were necessary. It's been a year now though, and we still haven't found bin Laden and almost all of our efforts have been fruitless. I thinks it's time to suspend the search.

As for the effect the attacks had on our country, we have realized that we have a long way to go to make our country safe. Airport security probably has the furthest to go. The security of military bases has improved, though, no longer maintaining an open-base status."

A Family Tradition

Some families have long-standing relatioships with Lee University. They have had generation after generation of students attend Lee to earn their college degrees. These students are often refered to as "legacy kids" by members of the administrative staff. Kevin Brooks, the alumni coordinator, said "Dozens of legacy kids come to Lee each year. There are many families that are in their third and fourth generation of Lee students." Most that have attended Lee for a while would agree that there are many reasons why families would keep sending their kids to Lee to complete their education.

One of the main reasons why parents love for their kids to attend Lee is because of the Christian atmosphere. After experiencing it for themselves, they do not want to children to miss the opportunity to go to a college where the teachers pray for their students. Paul Kirby describes Lee as "a good balance beween faith and life." Another reason why families keep investing the Lee experience is because of the teachers. Lee is a small school, but it means that the school and faculty are more personable. Freshman Layne Bailey came to Lee because of the great professors and the personal attention they give to their students. Still others like Lee's opportunity to get involved. According to Brett Mauldin, "You can be as involved as you want to be." Jessica Morris enjoys Lee for some of the same reasons. She said, "There are lots of things to get involved in, and it is easy to find your place here." When asked why he would send his kids to Lee, Tanard Rousey said, "I like the campus, and I want them to have the same experience I had."

No matter what the reason, alumni love to see their children enjoying and learning at the school where they made so many wonderful memories. The faculty and administration love to see these families returning to Lee as well. The alumni office in coordination with the admissions office are currently working on an accurate account of the generations of students from all families that have attended Lee. With the support of Dr. Conn and the funds from a recent grant, they hope to have all of the information by spring of 2003. On the following pages, there are four families of legacy students highlighted.

"Lee Univeristy is a special place for me and my family. We have all made a lot of memories here."

Becky Burdashaw

The Burdashaws

Siblings JohnPaul and Becky Burdashaw are part their family's rich hisory with Lee University. They are the third generation of their family to attend Lee, and among the many who have contributed to the school in different ways. JohnPaul and Becky's grandfather, Paul Barker, was among the first generation to attend Lee, and he began his freshman year during Lee's first year as an accredited college. He later went on to serve on the Board of Directors during the late 1970's. The next generation of Lee students includes three aunts, two uncles, and JohnPaul and Becky's mom and dad, Tim Burdashaw and Debbie Barker. Tim and Debbie met at Lee and were married between their junior and senior year. With majors in Pastoral Studies and Christian Education, both are now using their skills at North Cleveland Church of God.

Now, JohnPaul, in his third year, and Becky, in her second year, are finding that Lee really is the great place that they have heard about for so many years. JohnPaul can be seen wearing number 23 on the baseball team and the Greek letters Alpha Gamma Chi. He also plans to become the third generation of ministers in his family, and as a business major he plans to go to seminary. Becky is busy being a peer leader and a member of Alpha Chi honor society. She is majoring in Biological Chemistry and plans to get her MDPhD.

During the Sadies' chase one year, Debbie Barker chased her date, Tim Burdashaw, through a window in one of Dr. Bowdle's classes in the Vest building and down some stairs where she fell and broke her ankle. She did manage to rip off the collar of his shirt and get his doll, which meant that he had to pay for the date.

"Lee has always been a part of my future. I loved growing up around the campus. I never really considered attending any other school."

Melody Browning

The Brownings

The Brownings are a family very familiar to Lee University. Melody Browning is a third generation Lee student on both sides of her family. Melody's father, Gene Browning, was actually brought home from the hospital to Ellis Hall, the married housing facility at that time. His parents married while they were still students, and had all three of their sons while they were attending Lee and living in Ellis Hall. When it was Mr. Brownings' turn to go to college, he found himself once again living in Ellis Hall. It was during his years at Lee that he met his wife, Pamela Coker.

Dr. Browning's father had also attended Lee College right after he returned from fighting in World War II. His career as a student in Tennessee only lasted three weeks before deciding to return home to Texas. Dr. Browning met Gene at Lee Day during their senior year of high school, and they began dating in the fall of 1974 when they got to Lee. Just after the May graduation of 1978, Pamela and Gene were married. Now, their daughter Melody is a junior here at Lee, and Pamela Browning in now Dr. Browning of Lee's Education department. Melody, following in her mother's footsteps, is a Human Development major and a member of Delta Zeta Tau. Melody and her mother are both a part of the Gateway program, Melody as a peer leader and Dr. Browning as an instructor.

Roommates

Most college freshmen move into their dorms having never met their roommate and having no idea what they are going to be like. This was not the case when Lauren Stansky from Athens, Georgia, and Danica Honeycutt from Whiteville, North Carolina, got to Lee in August of 2002. Their mothers had actually been roommates while they were students at Lee, and now their daughters would live together. Lauren and Danica share more than just a room in college, however. Both girls are third generation Lee students on their moms' side of the family, both are members of Lee Singers, and Lauren's dad actually works for Danica's father. Although they both were allowed to choose which college they wanted to attend, both always knew that they would come to Lee. Danica said, "We've been hearing stories about it since we were little." Some of the stories they've heard include one about how their moms used to try to get around the rule that only allowed them to wear skirts by wearing pants under their skirts, and taking off the skirt when they thought it was safe. Now it is Lauren and Danica's turn to make memories of their own that perhaps they will be telling their own daugters someday.

"I like to hear stories from my parents about how things have changed since they were here."

you know you live in a DORM if...

. . . your bed is used for more than sleeping.

There is only enough space in a dorm room for the bare furniture essentials: beds, desks, and chairs. The most appealing of these to the average college student is the bed, because it tempts heavy eyes with the bliss of sleep. Yet, the college life does not allow for much indulgence of that wish, so most students satisfy themselves by turning their beds into multi-purpose pieces of equipment. From watching a movie to eating a snack, like Makinze Lovellin, anything and everything can happen on a dorm bed.

Students in dorms use refrigerators just as much as people who live off campus. The problems they face, however, are a bit more frustrating. Whether they are full size in the lounge, or compact in the dorm room, refrigerators never seem to have enough room . . . the more space is available, the more people use it. Other frustrations arise as a result, such as food theft and uncleanliness. College students figure out quickly that with refrigerators, size does matter.

The pressures of classes and social engagements are time consuming, but after a month of wearing dirty clothes laundry is in order. For students living in dorms, the annoyance of this task is remedied by dubbing it a social event in itself. When dorm inhabitants barely see their neighbors, this bonding experience is well appreciated and useful for catching up on the latest happenings.

College students do not exactly have the time, space, or money to buy chic storage containers, so the "creative" look becomes essential. Tupperware is a fast and effective solution to the problem. Whether there is a need to store clothes, food, books, or odds and ends, these plastic wonders aim to please because they come in all shapes and sizes. The usual mess of the dorm room would be significantly increased without the contributions of tupperware.

One of the biggest hassles of living in a dorm is the lack of individual kitchen space. Microwaves and small refrigerators allowed in dorm rooms are convenient, but after the meal is over there is the problem of the dirty dishes. Some rooms have small vanities, but washing dishes where one washes his or her face is a rather unappealing thought. The next best thing is to trek all the way down the hall to the bathroom sinks, or perhaps the lounge.

When the time came to leave home, there was the assumption that there would be more freedoms to enjoy. While this turns out to be mostly true for college students, living in a dorm can be very limiting. The cleanliness that mom always insisted upon is no longer unavoidable without consequences. Room check is a dreaded day in the dorm world, when clothes are crammed into the closet and books rammed under the bed. Students quickly learn how to throw the room into temporary order, or face the degrading effects of demerits.

. . . you get demerits for not cleaning your room.

you know you live OFF-CAMPUS if...

. . . the couch can double as a bed.

One of the best things about living off campus is that there is room for multiple people to sleep over. With the opportunity being such a blessing, it follows that some thought must be put into sleeping accommodations. The couch, being a space saver and an essential item anyway, becomes the most convenient option to plan for. It should be long enough to stretch out on and some form of convertible, or a futon in order to double as a bed.

It can take a while for students living off campus to get used to the process of paying monthly bills, especially since dorm life does not have that annoyance. To aid with this problem, around the time rent is due there are usually a few friendly reminders posted around the house in strategic positions. These helpful notes can be found on the refrigerator, the bedroom door, or the kitchen table.

Since freshman year students develop the craving to burn candles, as dorm life does not permit it . . . so when the time comes to move off campus it is a great pleasure to be able to light one up and watch it glow. In every room there is sure to be a candle of some sort, either for aesthetic value or to freshen the air. Such a small thing can be a reminder that sometimes the simple things in life are the most enjoyable.

Without the weekly room checks that were so dreaded in the past, the responsibility of cleanliness rests solely on the shoulders of the students. Since living off campus calls for more discipline regarding school work and bills, and allows for a bigger variety of possible activities, cleaning the dishes is low on the list of priorities. They pile up in the sink until someone has the sacrificial courage and time to tackle them.

Living off campus means it does not matter how late the hour . . . friends of any sex can invade the house. This being one of the most desired privileges, students off campus use every opportunity that comes to hang out with both genders. It makes no difference if it is dinner and a movie-watching night, coffee along with a book discussion, or a few rounds of games on the Playstation. The liberty to be together makes any activity enjoyable.

After being used to eating on the bed, or any other handy place, the kitchen table is quite a novelty. Even more, the ability to dine with place settings is nearly a foreign concept. The beauty of adequate space is apparent to the student living off campus every time breakfast sits on the freshly spread table in the morning, or friends gather around it for dinner. Such events seem to turn a place of residence into a home. The student off campus, as a result, feels comfort in this independence.

Keshma originally decided to come to Lee because of the Christian environment, but that decision did not come without challenges along the way. Initially, Keshma was skeptical about coming to Cleveland, because of the stereotypical Tennesseans she had seen on television. She was worried about the racism she might encounter, but once she got here, she learned that was not what bothered her the most about the town. "There are so many churches on every corner on one side of the city, and complete poverty on the other. There cannot be so many churches and such poverty." This reality did not seem possible. Where Keshma is from, Christians take care of the poor as best they can. Because there are so many Christians in Cleveland, Keshma did not think that Cleveland would have any poverty-striken areas. One of the biggest surprises for Keshma was one of the southern traditions - life revolves around food. "I have learned that people are different and they live differently." Now that she has been here for a while, Cleveland has become a second home. "I know that I am at Lee University because the Lord wants me here."

Welcome to

Jennifer was ready to experience small-town life, warmer weather, and friendly people she had heard about when she moved to Cleveland for her freshman year of college. Although she was forewarned about what Cleveland would be like, she was still surprised by several things. First, the slow pace of society was an adjustment she had to make. "It was hard for me to get used to people driving so slow!" Next, was the Christian atmosphere. Even though Jennifer had grown up in church as the daughter of a pastor, she was not accustomed to restaurants playing Christian music and Cleveland as a whole having better morals. The last big surprise for Jennifer was how true southern hospitality turned out to be. "Everyone's nice down here - the Wal-mart greeters are friendly, drivers are courteous, and random people that you don't even know will talk to you." Jennifer was shocked that cars waited for people to cross the street or to walk by them in a parking lot. "If you step in front of a car in Ohio, you get run over!" While living in the south has been a good experience, Jennifer has realized that she is really a city girl at heart, and she could never settle in a small town like Cleveland. She prefers the options a big city provides: more restaurants, more stores, and more things to do.

Lisa found it very difficult to leave her family and friends in Tuscon when she came to Lee. She had not even seen the campus and barely knew the name of the city in Tennessee. The strangest thing that she found when she got here was the 'Christianized' culture. "It is socially correct to go to church and be a 'good person' here. Tuscon is nothing like that," she shares. Yet since the initial southern culture shock wore off, Lisa has found that she enjoys it here in Cleveland. The campus is beautiful and the surrounding country interesting. She was able to experience real Autumn for the first time in her life. "The leaves were amazing! I never knew that they could be such bright colors. It looked like a post card." Yet, living in Tennessee has its downfalls as well. Lisa was not prepared for the cold. She thought she was coming here for better weather than the unbearable hottness of Tuscon. "At least at home I could get away with a light shirt and flip-flops pretty much year-round. Here I have to go get a whole new assortment of warmer clothes!" Yet, all in all, Lisa finds living in another culture very beneficial. The major plus is that it equips her to better relate to different people, which is something that she loves to do. "It is a great thing to get outside your bubble and be uncomfortable for awhile."

Cleveland!

Layout by Cindy Costa.

The hardest thing for Roberto when he moved to Cleveland was leaving behind his family and friends back home. He was excited, however, about moving to a new country and living in a new environment. Roberto came to Lee, because he received a tennis scholarship. Once he arrived, he began to notice many differences between Cleveland and his home. One of the most obvious things that Roberto noticed about his new environment was the emphasis placed on religion. As he got to know Lee students and other people from the area, he noticed that along with the emphasis on religion, people did not do "bad stuff" like drinking alcohol or going to clubs. This behavior was quite different than what Roberto was used to, but it was different in a good way. Now that he has been at Lee for a few years, and had the opportunity to travel around the country some with the tennis team, Roberto has decided to stay in the US after graduation, but not in Cleveland.

For a college student, cooking a real meal can be quite a difficult task. First of all, there is the matter of finding time. Some students are so busy that they struggle just to find the time to eat a meal, much less cook one. For senior Katie Glines, finding enough time to prepare a meal is difficult because, "When you're in class all day and busy with studying and extracurricular activities, how do you find the time?" If one does manage to have time to cook, deciding what to cook is the next challenge. Grill out or stir fry or bake in the oven or what? Finally, there is the chore of actually trying to follow a recipe and put the dish together. Once the meal is in the oven, on the grill or in the skillet, all that is left for one to do is pray it turns out right.

Lee students do cook, however, and some of them actually enjoy it. Junior Tony McCloud likes cooking a variety of dishes from spaghetti to chicken wings to omelets. He tries to cook four or five times a week, but the hardest thing about cooking for him is remembering to turn off the oven. Sophomore Jordan Howe enjoys being able to cook now that she is out of the dorm and living in Brown Ave. Apartments. She enjoys baking choclate chip cookies and grilling chicken. Chicken is also a favorite for Craig Sluder. He cooks at least twice a week for himself and his roommate, and they have actually mastered the art of cooking hot dogs on a George Foremen Grille. According to Sluder, "My least favorite thing about cooking is cleaning up." Geoff Goodman, a senior history major, has actually worked as a cook at Cracker Barrel and Don Carlones here in Cleveland. Geoff cooks for himself at least eight times a week, with seafood dishes such as shrimp scampi being his favorites. Geoff said what he likes best about cooking is "watching other people enjoy what I make. It's a ministry." Here are some recipes from Lee students and faculty for each meal of the day.

The Breakfast Burrito is a favorite recipe of hers, handed down from her close friend, David Albala. Since breakfast is the most important meal of the day, Tanya makes sure that she starts her busy days off right with a well-rounded breakfast. Photos by Victoria Swisher

lunch

Most people need a boost in the middle of the day, and eating a healthy lunch is the perfect way to get the energy needed to make it through the rest of the day. Patty Silverman's Ten Layer Overnight Salad is something healthy and different for a nice lunch. Since Mrs. Silverman is responsible for all of Lee's Public Realtions students, her days can get quite hectic. She likes preparing this recipie because its quick and easy. All you have to do is throw the ingredients together the night before and serve it up the next day. Photo by Erin Boardwine.

Eat Out, Eat Local

Going out to eat? The real question is, where to go? It is no secret that Cleveland, Tennessee, is not known for its fine dining choices. Of course, there is the typical Applebee's with their famous ribs, O'Charley's with their delicious salads, and Belair Grill with their unforgetable bread and honey butter. When running short on time, there are some of the faster places in town to eat, such as Zaxby's, Fazoli's, and Panera. If it is down-home country cooking, Catie's Kitchen, Cracker Barrel or Earl's are just the places to go. For barbeque, southern style, J & G's BBQ and Jordan's BBQ are two of Clevleland's best. Do not forget the most important meal of the day. Breakfast is served up right at the Waffle House and Dunkin Dounuts. There are also a few restaurants that are unique to Cleveland, like Jenkins and Gardener's Market. Both of these are known for their great food and their original atmosphere. Cleveland has a few ethnic restaurants as well that include Mexican, Italtian, and Chinese food. These are restaurants like Monterrey, The Gondolier, and Kim San. Lastly, there are a few restaurants that are open late, like Steak -n- Shake and Denny's.

Regardless of the type of food, or the amount of time to eat a meal, the local restaurant options seem to get a little old at times. Sometimes it is good to try something a little different, but a drive to Chattanooga is not exactly ideal.

A few Lee students have discovered a wonderful little restuarant right in downtown Cleveland called D & J Teahouse. This restaurant is owned by Julia and Dennis Young, a Chinese couple, and they only prepare authentic Chinese and Japanese food. Dennis does all the cooking while Julia acts as the hostess and tries to educate customers on Chinese culture The idea behind their restuarant is to make an American version of the Chinese teahouse, which is considered a high class restuarant in China. D & J specializes in dim sum, which is a small tray with a variety of different dishes that make up the meal. There are also a number of different chicken, seafood, beef, and vegetarian meals available. D & J Teahouse is dedicated to serving its customers the best meal for each individual. They accomplish this task by cooking each meal to suit the customer's taste and lifestyle. For example, for diabetics, there is no sugar added to their meal, or for dieters, their food is not cooked in oil. As a rule, the vegtables are cut fresh when ordered and many of the vegtables are home-grown in the Young's yard. There is also no MSG in any of the food, so everyone can enjoy it. According to Julia, their overall goal is "to help our customers understand Chinese culture and to help people keep healthy the Chinese way."

Julia Young also teaches dietary medicine and Tai Chi, a form of martial arts, part time at Cleveland State, and enjoys getting to know the Lee students that come in. One student, Brandon Howard, likes D & J because of the variety of vegetarian dishes on the menu. Charles Tsakrios, who is from Cleveland and attends Lee, said, "I like the wide selection of teas available." For something different without having to leave Bradley county, D & J Teahouse is worth a try.

Healthy Living

Diet and exercise. These two words are heard every day in America, and have become increasingly popular on campus at Lee. Whether trying to build muscles to impress all the girls or lose a few pound before spring break, it seems almost everyone at Lee is trying to improve their physical appearance. According to Lauren Stacy, a health and nutrition specialist at GNC in Bradley Square Mall, the most popular diet among Lee students is a high protien and low carbohydrate diet. Males typically use this diet to increase their muscle mass and females to decrease their body fat. Business major, Keola O'Dowd, is one of the Lee student on a high protien diet. Along with this diet, O'Dowd exercises three times each week, drinks protien shakes and occationally takes vitamins and supplement that contain the ingredients creatine or androstenedione. Creatine acts as a volumizer, providing energy for muscle contraction, and androstenedione is used to increase testosterone, which can also cause males to increase their muscle mass.

Junior John Landreth thinks that the use of supplements is okay, "as long as they don't speed up your heart." John Peterson acutally tried to add more protien into his diet, but he according to him, "it didn't do much."

For females trying to lose weight, there are also several products available. The most popular supplements are thermogenics products which increase metabolism and energy while decreasing appetite. Along with taking one of these products, Stacy suggests that females trying to lose weight follow three helpful guidelines. First, make sure that you burn more calories than you intake. Next, eating four to six small meals throughout the day helps to keep metabolism boosted while curing most cravings. Lastly, exercise three to five times a week and focus on strength training and cardio.

This type of dieting is the way to go for some female students, but according to sophomore Natalie Wharton, "Why diet? You should be confident with who you are." Deborah LaCrosse, a human development major, is not comfortable using supplements, because according to Deborah, "you should do everything natural. The most important thing is your own health, and that is not something to compromise to lose weight."

The Impact of a Mentor

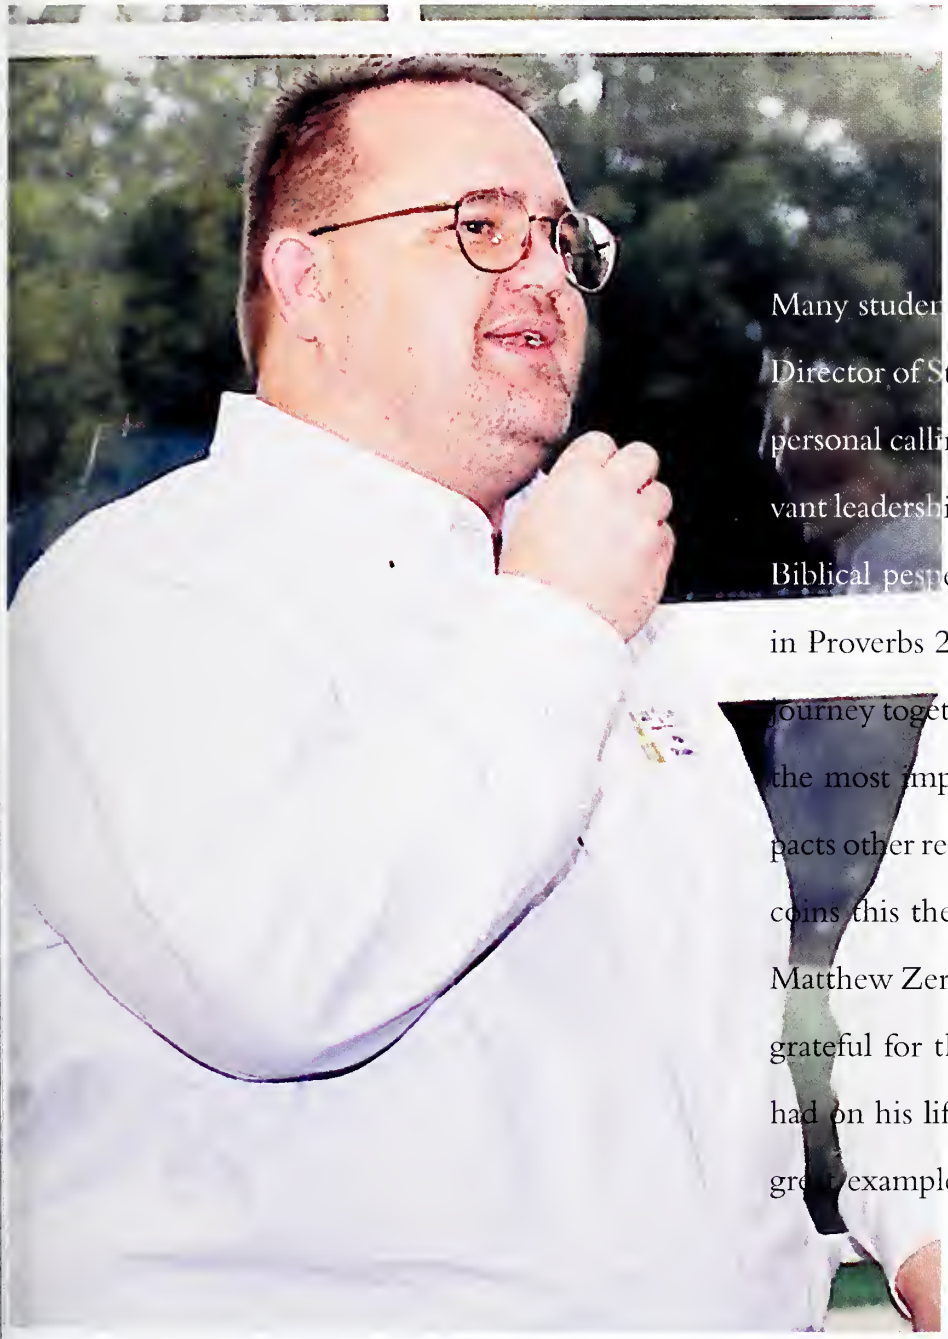
"My mentor is my father because he is a man of integrity and a dominant influence in my life."

Josh Bare

According to Webster's College Dictionary, a mentor is "a wise advisor; a trusted teacher and counselor;" however, mentors are really much more than that. A mentor is someone who gives advice when there is no clear answer or course of action, and someone who exemplifies uncompromising morals and values. They are trustworthy, dependable and wise, and they impact lives, sometimes without even knowing it. Good mentors can often found in pastors, professors, and parents who are always willing to help. Kausha Panaell, a Vocal Performance major, said that her mother was her mentor because "She is a good example of Christian morals and values that are important to me. She is the model of a virtuous woman." Dr. George serves as a mentor to aspiring PE teacher, Jody Bacchus. Jody said that through his time at Lee, Dr. George has become a good friend, and he has helped him to become a better man. Senior Faith Griffeth found her mentor in high school. Her state youth director's wife began to pour into Faith's life in high school, and continues to encourage her to do what God has put in her to do. While many mentors are people that are older or more experienced, they can come in all forms, shapes and sizes. For Kyle Morrow, his mentor is his peer and friend, Jonny Moore. Kyle said that more than anything else, Jonny has taught him how to love. It is not a matter of age, but a matter of influence upon a life that makes a good mentor. Students can make great mentors, especially for younger students. Lee University gives its students the opportunity to be mentors through several programs such as Big Pal, Little Pal, Backyard, and the Peer Leader program. Those that have been able to participate in these programs have found them to be a very rewarding experience. While going through the ever-changing years of college, the importance in having a mentor is vital. Sophomore B.J. Johnson has found that his mentor is someone that he can really open up to when he needs advice. Kyle Morrow knows that his mentor will always be there for him so he will never have to face anything alone. Faith Griffeth enjoys the knowledge that there is someone praying for her and someone to hold her accountable. Mentors offer guidence, set good examples, and help accomplish goals.

"I think that a mentor is someone who invests into you. It's a Paul and Timothy kind of relationship."

Tamra Carlson



Mike Hayes

Many students seek the wisdom of Mike Hayes, Director of Student Development at Lee. He has the personal calling to develop young men and teach servant leadership. For Mike, mentoring is based on the Biblical perspective of "iron sharpening iron" found in Proverbs 27:17. He sees it as "simply sharing the journey together." Developing a good relationship is the most important part of this journey, which impacts other relationships in the life of the student. He coins this the "ripple effect in the body of Christ." Matthew Zerrip, a senior who Mike mentors, is very grateful for the impact that such a man of God has had on his life. "I respect him so much for being a great example of a servant leader and for constantly renewing my vision and focus."

Coach Hughes

Rick Hughes has coached basketball at the college level for 20 years, investing the last four in the Lee Flames. He and his wife work as a team, taking each year as a new opportunity to mentor the players. They want them to have another home here at Lee, and act as second parents by involving them in their family as much as possible. Coach Hughes thinks of mentoring as a day to day practice of leading in the dimensions of morality and spirituality. His actions are purposeful and genuine as he seeks to find out who each member is to help them mature and grow. When players leave the team, he hopes they will say, "He cared more for me than for the game." Hughes thinks of basketball as an amazing opportunity for players to learn how to deal with life. "It is a game of life in which you learn how to deal with people and yourself."

Bianca Mason

A sophomore Elementary Education major, Bianca has been involved in Backyard ministries since her first semester at Lee. The group of students run tutoring programs for underprivileged children on one to one basis. They help them with their classwork and studies, but more importantly they build close relationships as mentors to the kids. To Bianca, a mentor is "someone to talk to . . . a friend with wisdom and experience that serves as an encouragement spiritually." She has tutored Ashley, a thirteen year-old ever since she joined the ministry. "We are like sisters. It is an amazing gift to have the opportunity to build long term relationships with these kids."

Entertain Me

After long hours of studying, cramming, and replaying lecture recordings for the tenth time in a row, a break is needed and well deserved. For a time-out from all the work and stress of school, Lee students look to Cleveland and the surrounding areas as a source of entertainment. One can find everything from the fine arts of the Five Points Museum to the challenging adventure of the Climbing Wall to Carmike movie theaters. Whatever one's mood, there is always something to do.

Due to the strong music department and the gifted musicians that attend Lee, many enjoy the combined atmosphere of music and coffee that Thursty Thursdays supplies. They are known for their great schedule of talented performers and are frequented by Lee students. Sean Mills, a freshman at Lee, agrees, "Thirsty Thursdays is an awesome place! They have great coffee." Whether it is to chill out, soak up some tunes of local bands, or simply get a caffine fix, Thursty Thursdays is a place that Lee students can depend on for a good time.

For the hands-on type, the bowling alley, North Lee Lanes, the cliffs, white water rafting and a local climbing wall encompass kinesthetic entertainment. Every Saturday night past nine o'clock, Lee students can be seen entering North Lee Lanes as it turns into a disco bowling alley with neon lights and a disco ball. Cliff jumping is a sure way to get the adrenaline pumping in students as they plunge into the Hiawasee River. Although this may be fun, students have learned over the years that it can be dangerous. Another fun water activity that is not far away from there is white water rafting on the Ocoee River. This activity has become a favorite among students. For a challenge, the climbing wall, located in downtown Cleveland at Extreme Outdoors, mimics a mountain in difficulty and in fun.

For a relaxing atmosphere, students venture towards the Five Points Museum, the Bradley Square Mall, or the local Carmike or Dollar Theatre. The Five Points Museum offers a great place to see the latest displays and a chance to relax. If one is looking for a new outfit, Cleveland's Bradley Square Mall contains a variety of stores that carry everything a student could need to look great. If all else fails to provide suitable entertainment, there's always the movies. Lee students can be found at the Carmike theatres and the Dollar theatre any night of the week.

For the late night studiers who need a reward for their hard labors, there are still a few options open. The Waffle House, Steak n' Shake, and Denny's all offer snacks and good conversational environments. Walmart posesses a host of exciting activities for late night adventurers. The only difficulty comes in deciding "what can I play with first?" As freshman Brandon Wood says, "Walmart is the place to be."

With a bit of resourcefulness, and experienced friends, Lee students are able to be entertained in Cleveland. Although this city becomes a home away from home at first by force, as students come to school and learn the opportunities that Cleveland has, it soon grows to be loved.

Entertain Myself

While it may be the buckle of the Bible belt, Cleveland, Tennessee, is not exactly the entertainment capital of the world. It is the typical small southern town, where everything shuts down after 10 pm. According to Shaun Gentner, "There are only two options in this town: watch a movie or go out to eat." Those few things seem to get monotonous at times. When the options of things to do in Cleveland are running low or when a student happens to catch a few spare moments to themselves, what is it that Lee students do to keep themselves entertained?

Senior Dean Heller said, "Cleveland is as good as any other place. You just have to be creative." Creative is a good word to describe the activities that Lee students participate in. Some students are artisticaly inclined, and enjoy creating various things from paintings to scrapbooks. Jennifer Chambers is one of these students who likes to do coloring in her spare time. Other students enjoy physical challenges and being outside, like senior Brandon Potts. "I enjoy a variety of recreational activities such as horse-back riding and golfing at the local driving range." Do not forget about the amazing musical talents that have made their way to Lee. J.J. Chiara uses his abilities during his spare time by practicing the guitar. Even students who are not musically gifted have fun listening to a favorite CD as a form of entertainment. For some students, like Kristin Philippi, it is hard enough to find a spare minute, much less a chance to relax If they happen to have any free time, it is usually spent catching up on sleep. Activities vary greatly from student to student, but most would have to agree that there is always something to do to be entertained.

Some students at Lee actually choose not to participate in some forms of entertainment that are provided by the community and society for various reasons. Human Development major, Melissa Martin, thinks that many of the movies and television shows are too focused on sex. She said, "It's over-done and causing moral decay in our society." Zabrina Culberson, a junior, thinks that the cost of entertainment is too high and not really worth what is provided in return. " I would rather go look around in Hobby Lobby then spend seven dollars on a movie."

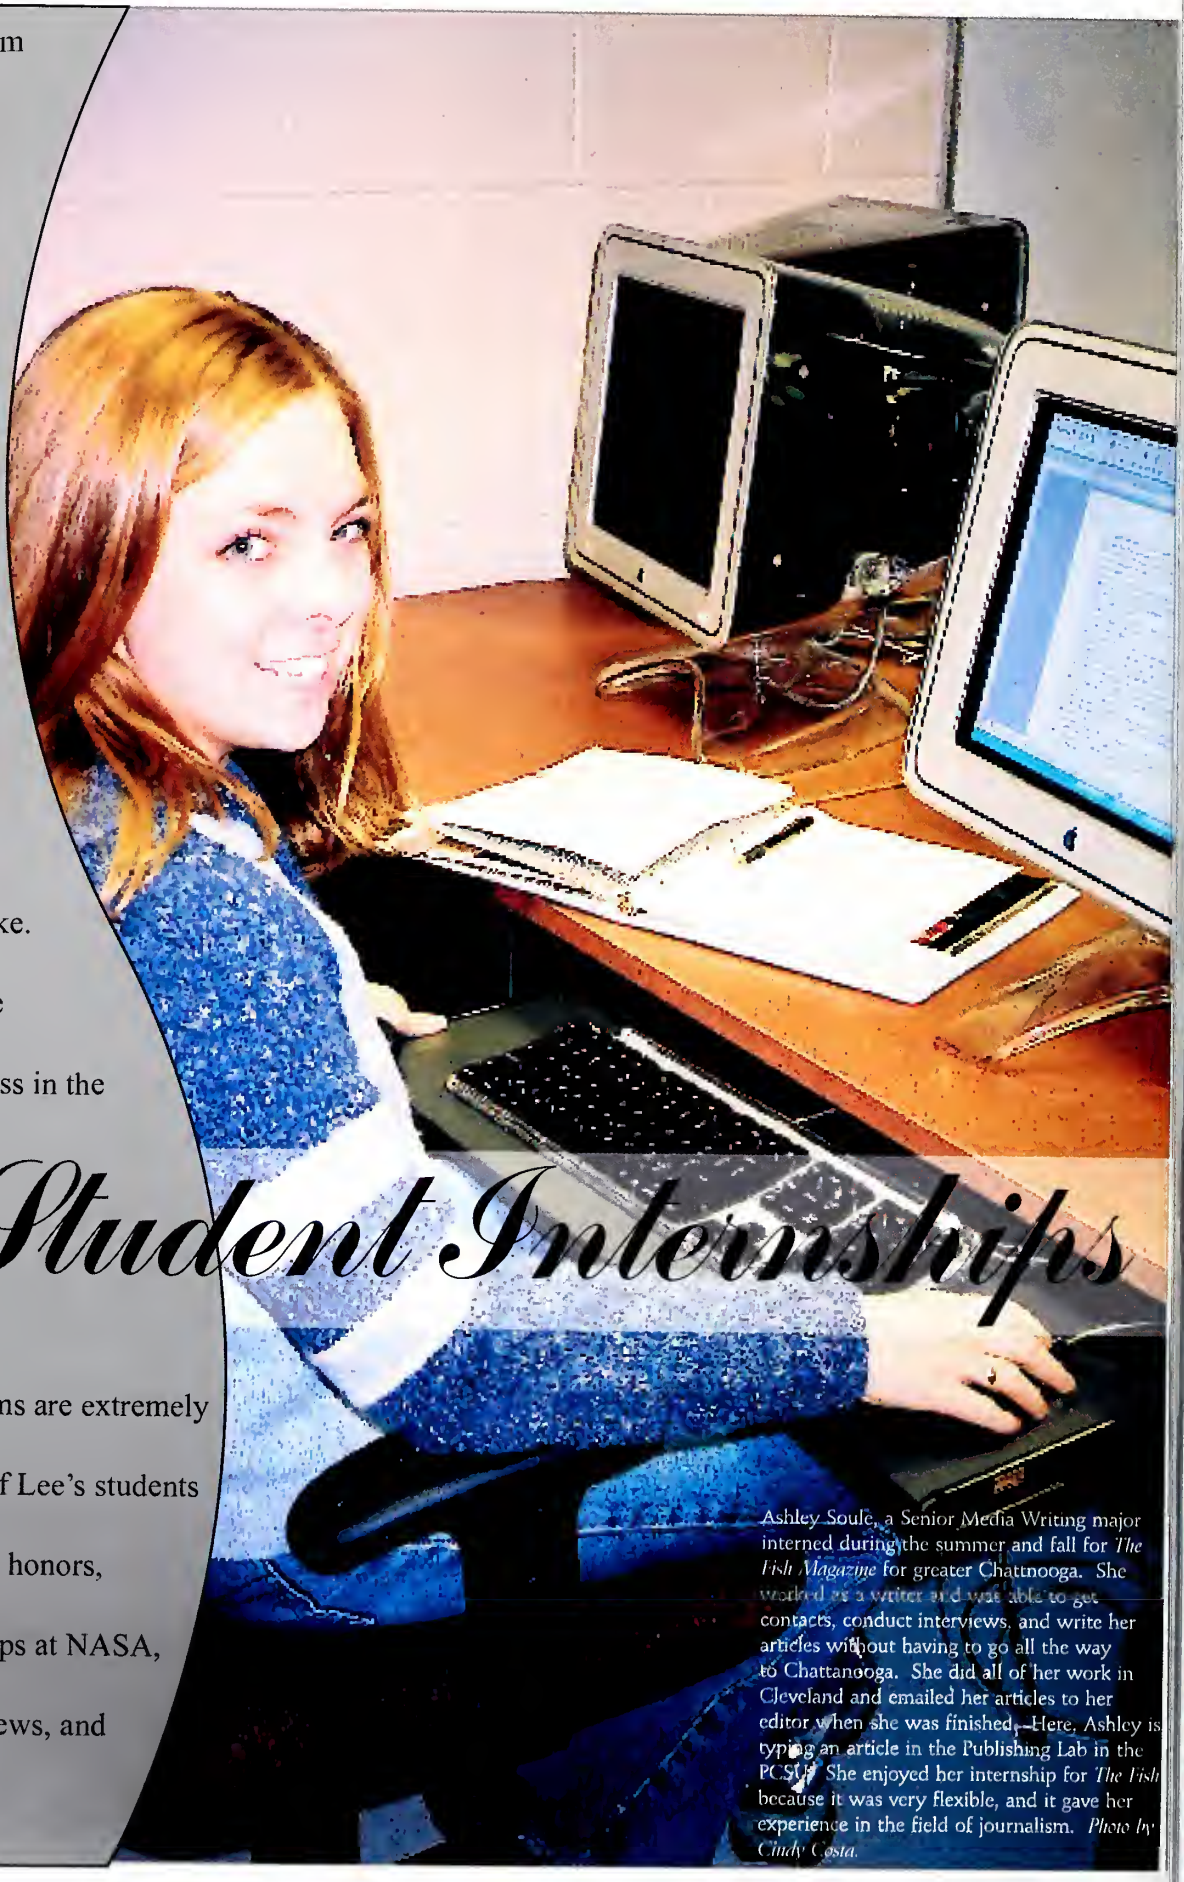
Student Internships

In order to graduate from Lee, some departments such as Business and Communications, require their students to complete an internship. This requirement gives students the opportunity to learn more about their field of study and see which areas they like and dislike. Internship credits can be completed at any business in the student's field of interest, and related to his or her major.

Many internship programs are extremely competitive, and some of Lee's students have received these high honors, participating in internships at NASA, the White House, Fox News, and many others.



Ashley Soule, a Senior Media Writing major interned during the summer and fall for The Fish Magazine for greater Chattnooga. She worked as a writer and was able to get contacts, conduct interviews, and write her articles without having to go all the way to Chattanooga. She did all of her work in Cleveland and emailed her articles to her editor when she was finished. Here, Ashley is typing an article in the Publishing Lab in the PCSL. She enjoyed her internship for The Fish because it was very flexible, and it gave her experience in the field of journalism. Photo by Cindy Costa.

She enjoyed spending her summer in our nation's capitol while she learned about being dedicated and responsible to her work. The most rewarding aspect of Amanda's job was knowing that she overcame her fears and succeeded in an intimidating place. *Photo courtesey of Amanda Napoli. Jesse Cox, a junior Business and Accounting major, busily looks over some auditing papers at his internship at Arnett, Kirksey, Kimsey, Pierce and Lay, PLLC. Jesse's job was to work on tests of the auditing procedure for city and county schools in the area. Jesse said "I enjoyed my internship because I got to apply my school knowledge to the business world." Photo by Cindy Costa.

Students find their internships both a learning and rewarding experience. Kellie Makeeff, who interned at the Brooklyn Tabernacle in New York City, learned the importance of being a team player. Public Relations major Starr Kelly discovered that she loved working in corporate training and development during her internship, and plans to begin a career in that field after graduation. Junior Jesse Cox found his internship to be rewarding. He gained experience for his future employment in business and accounting. No matter what field, internships allow students to apply their classroom knowledge to situations in the real world.

To the Extreme and back

For years Lee students have complained about the lack of activities that Cleveland provides. While Cleveland may not have the most attractions on earth, some Lee students have chosen to be creative with their free time and get involved in activities that are different and exciting. Lee students have discovered extreme sports. From hiking to sky diving to snow boarding and much more, students are finding more and more ways to have fun, whether they are in Cleveland or not.

Some of the extreme sports are closer to Cleveland than most students realize. The Ocoee River provides a recreational area for white water rafting and kayaking. Close to the Ocoee is the Cherokee National Forest with hiking trails, repelling and rock climbing for those who love to spend time in nature.

If students are willing to travel a little further to have fun, Cleveland is not far from some great ski resorts. It is just a short five hour drive to some of the best places to ski in North Carolina and little bit further to Virginia and West Virginia. Students love the physical challenge that skiing and snowboarding provide.

Lindsey Caldwell learns to snow board in the mountains close to her home in Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Freshman Morgan Crawford enjoys skiing becasue of the different levels of skiing. Sam Kidwell, a youth ministries major, prefers snowboarding to skiing because it takes more talent.

For the real daredevils at Lee, bungee jumping and sky diving offer an adrenaline rush like no other sport. Senior Eric Roark has been bungee jumping three times at places as far as New Zealand and as close as Gatlinburg. When asked why he likes to bungee jump, he said, "You only live once and to die is gain." Other students, like Leslie Spearman, enjoy the rush of jumping from an airplane thousands of feet in the air. She said, "It was so scary, but so much fun!"

Water activities are also favorites among Lee students. Some enjoy white water rafting on the Ocoee and other rivers, while some prefer the ocean to rivers. Senior David Salen likes surfing in Florida because it gives a sense of overcoming nature. He said, "It's fun because you push yourself to the limits to see how far you can really go."

Extreme sports are becming more and more popular at Lee. Whether it is snowboarding in Colorado, white water rafting on the Ocoee, surfing in Florida, or bungee jumping in New Zealand, Lee students are bound to have a good time.

DEPARTMENT FASHION

Fashion trends at Lee are not a dream. Some departments require students to dress according to the expected code of the workplace they will find themselves in. It can be a preparatory and mandatory part of departmental practice. Many higher division Business proffessors, for example, take no less than the very best from their students, no matter how early the hour. Other "Leevites" find the department fashion trend to be a natural phenomonon based on what is convenient to the needs of their particular studies. For example, Communication majors studying drama very often dress comfortably and customized to a unique style. Individuality is their trend. Megen Saez, a student who works in the Records Office, comes into contact with all kinds of majors. From her experience, they are "very often recognizeable. Drama people, for instance. A lot of them seem like they dress to be a character in a play even though they're not always acting."

BUILDING LEE

This building is large enough to easily house the classrooms, offices and library that the Education department was so badly in need of for years. Its spacious lecture hall is a popular room for many kinds of school gatherings and functions.

DeVOS COLLEGE OF EDUCATION

This dorm houses about 120 male students in the style of apartments, much like those found in dorms Livingston and Keeble. Close to the new walking track on Parker Street, and with the near natural beauty of many trees and flowing water, it is one of the most environmentally beautiful buildings at Lee.

B.L. HICKS HALL

This stately dorm was built for male students originally, switching to female use in the fall semester of 2002 with the male dorms Storms Hall and O'Bannon-Bowdle Halls recently completed. Covering 33,000 square feet, Hicks stands solidly and has a lived in, yet still new appearance.

As a twin female dorm of Livingston, it would be easy to assume that they were built together. Yet Livingston was dedicated in 1995, a full four years behind Keeble. The back side of the building had to be remodeled with an entrance and columns to tie it together with Keeble's added 35,000 square feet.

This newest dormitory addition to Lee houses 248 male students on four levels, with four community groups of 16 on each floor. Its south hall, O'Bannon, was dedicated September 13, the same day that the name of its north hall was announced to be Bowdle Hall. Nicknamed "the palace," it is a stunningly beautiful sight.

O'BANNON-BOWDLE HALL

This newest work in progress is set to open to students in the spring semester of 2003. The right wing houses sports medicine, while the left wing is for athletic training. The second floor holds office space. Funded by a gift from local businessman, Toby McKenzie, this building is a well needed addition.

WALKING TRAIL ON PARKER STREET

Students are often seen running or walking together around this 3/4 mile scenic track. The trail was paved in the fall of 2001 and the park completed the next summer. With its many benches, picnic areas, and pavilion, it is a perfect place to soak in natural beauty.

The growth of Lee University is astounding. Even in the last seven years buildings have seemed to spring up effortlessly. Mr. Goff, Vice President for Institutional Advancement, is well aware of the vast changes the campus has gone through. He sincerely notes that "God has richly blessed us" as he remembers the recent developments at Lee.

Controversy between universities and sleepy towns in which they reside is not a new phenomenon, and Lee University is no exception. Although most students are oblivious to it, professors who have been around for a while and long-time residents of Cleveland can attest to the fact that Lee and the community do not always see eye to eye. This past year, several new issues in the community caused long-lasting effects on the college as well.

The name "Vista Drive" is a name that will go down in Lee University and Cleveland history, due to the five students who lived there, and pushed their neighbors too far. After a midnight fireworks display and enough parked cars to furnish a dealership, the residents of Vista Drive went to the City Council. The result was a housing ordinance that shocked the Lee family and its surrounding community. On September 9, the City Council passed a decree that prohibited four or more unrelated people from living together, suddenly leaving over 1,000 off-campus students in violation of the law and worried about their finances.

dent Paul Conn and Dr. Matthew Melton, the Cleveland City Council revised the ordinance to allow four unrelated people to live together, and the Lee community breathed a sigh of relief. Unfortunately, that was not the end of the struggles between Lee and Cleveland.

The local elections soon followed, and with the lottery and liquor referendums on the ballot, several Cleveland citizens voiced concerns about the Lee students' influence on the outcome, despite the fact that the 18-25 year old age group is the least politically active of any grouping. Regardless, the legality of out-of-town students voting became an issue, and when the referendums did in fact pass, eyebrows were raised in wonder of the university's influence.

In a transient community like Cleveland, tensions come and go just like the people. This past year, has witnessed the coming and going of some of the community's biggest debates, and hopefully it will be years before Cleveland has to witness such events again.

May 16 - June 8, 2003

Dr. Laney and his wife accompanied 19 Lee students through Europe, on the Communications trip. Students were able to visit several respected media venues including the BBC, Bloomberg, and Radio France. They were also privileged to see President Bush speak at the American cemetery at Normandy on Memorial Day. Senior Matt Hensley said, "The opportunity to go to Europe was one that I will cherish for years to come - that is before I am able to go back." Here is Matt's photo of the Arc de Triumph in Paris.

Dr. Barnett and Dr. Hoffman supervised a group of 35 students as they traveled throughout the United Kingdom. They went to many different cities, including Glasgow, Edinburgh, Dublin, and London, and visited sites such as the Tower of London and Stratford upon Avon. Junior Lee Bergakker said, "London was my favorite city because there's a lot of history here, and it caused me to see the correlations between English history and my own." Seth LaMagna said, "The trip was incredible, not just because of the sites that I saw, but because of the friendships I made there." Chile

Dr. Lindquist and Mr. Minay led a group of 30 students to Chile for five weeks to earn six hours of Spanish class and their Cross Cultural credit. Students attended intermediate or advanced Spanish class every morning during the week and improved their conversational skills with the help of several seminary students at the Church of God seminary in Santiago. On the weekends, students were able to travel to places like La Serena to visit the beach and Pomaire for shopping. One weekend, the group was able to go skiing in the Andes Mountains. Their last week was spent in Puerto Montt were the students were able to use their improved Spanish while sightseeing around the area. Communications major Ashley Soule said, "The people were hospitable, the food was amazing - it was really difficult to leave. I'll never forget Chile." Above the students are at the El Colorado ski resort in the Andes Mountains.

San Francisco and Fresno
May 18-29, 2002

Dr. Anderson and five Lee students set out to California last May to earn their Cross Cultural credit while teaching children, feeding the homeless and seeing the sites. The students had opportunities to teach in classrooms with a diverse mix of students, minister to the people living in the "tenderloin area" of San Francisco, and visit many well-known sites. Ashlee Bigham said, "It gave us a chance to show God's love to everyone we came in contact with." Here Ashlee is caught climbing on one of the fallen red wood trees.

Ireland, Wales and England
May 12 - 21, 2002

Lee University's Campus Choir, under the leadership of Dr. Horton, toured to the United Kingdom to minister in song. The group of 120 sang at least once a day at churches throughout these countries. Aside from singing, the choir was able to visit Naven Hill, St. Patrick's Cathedral, and all the sites of London. Many of the places they visited in Ireland and Wales were linked to the revivals of the Great Awakening. Senior Carmen Daniel said, "It was really interesting to visit the sites in Wales and Ireland where the basis for our religion in the Church of God began. We learned so much about the history of their revivals that is mirrored in the American revivals of today." Here, three choir members pose in the infamous red telephone booths of England.

Dr. Browning, of the Education department, and Dr. Thompson, of the Business department, led a group of 15 students to Russia during the first summer session last year. The students actually took classes at the Eurasian Bible Seminary and had the opportunity to interact with many of the students there. The group also did their fair share of sightseeing, visiting Red Square, the Kremlin, the conservatory, and Dr. Browning's favorite, the Bolshoi Ballet. Human Development Major Kandi Gulley said, "My most memorable moment was when our group joined thousands of Christians in a march for Jesus that culminated in a worship service on Red Square." Dr. Simmons and Dr. Melton bravely crossed the Atlantic with a group of 34 students to study Humanities in Europe. Students were able to get up to 6 credits in Humanities. They spent a week attending class in Cleveland before traveling to France, Belgium, Germany and Holland. The group visited the Louvre in Paris, Brussels, Charlemagne's Cathedral, the Anne Frank House and Waterloo. Dr. Melton especially enjoyed going to the historic site at Waterloo. He said, "Getting to see it was the realization of a life-long dream. It really made history come alive." The group paused in Paris for a quick snap shot in front of the infamous Eiffel Tower.

Italy: Rome, Venice, Florence, and Capri
July 13-27, 2002

Some students, like Buck and Jenny Yates, choose to get their cross cultural credit without going on a school sponsored trip. The Yates honeymooned in Italy and received school credit for it. They traveled to Rome, Venice, Florence and Capri where they saw sights such as the Vatican, the Colosseum, the Duomo in Florence, and St. Mark's Square. Buck said, "I really enjoyed the history in Rome, and Capri was absolutely breathtaking." Here Jenny is pictured in front of the Colosseum in Rome.

China

July 5 - August 3, 2002

Teaching English was the main goal of the 18 students who traveled with Dr. Jimmy Harper to China last summer. The students taught conversational English as well as American games and songs to children at a camp in Jinhua. Although their days were long and tiring, most agreed that it was well worth it. Erin Boardwine said, "Teaching children is such a profound experience, but being able to teach a group of kids who take so little for granted taught me more than I ever thought possible." The group was also able to see some of the magnificent sites, including Tian'anmen Square, the Imperial Palace, and the Forbidden City. Here they are pictured on the Great Wall.

Trinidad and Tobago

December 27, 2002 - January 7, 2003

Suzanne Hamid took 12 students to visit tropical climates in her native country, Trinidad, over Christmas break. The students received cross cultural and World Religion credit on their trip for attending lectures based on culture and religion. While in Trinidad, the group traveled to various cities including Maracus Beach and Port of Spain. Miss Hamid, who recently became a citizen of the United States, took the students to see sites that included Mt. Saint Benedict, Asa Wright Nature Center, and a Hindu Temple. Public Relations major Patty Daughterty said, "I left the U.S. with what I believed to be knowledge of the world, but soon realized when arriving in Trinidad and Tobago, I knew nothing. I returned to the U.S. with not only a knowledge of the world but an understanding and respect for a country and its people." Here the group is pictured outside on Mt. Saint Benedict.

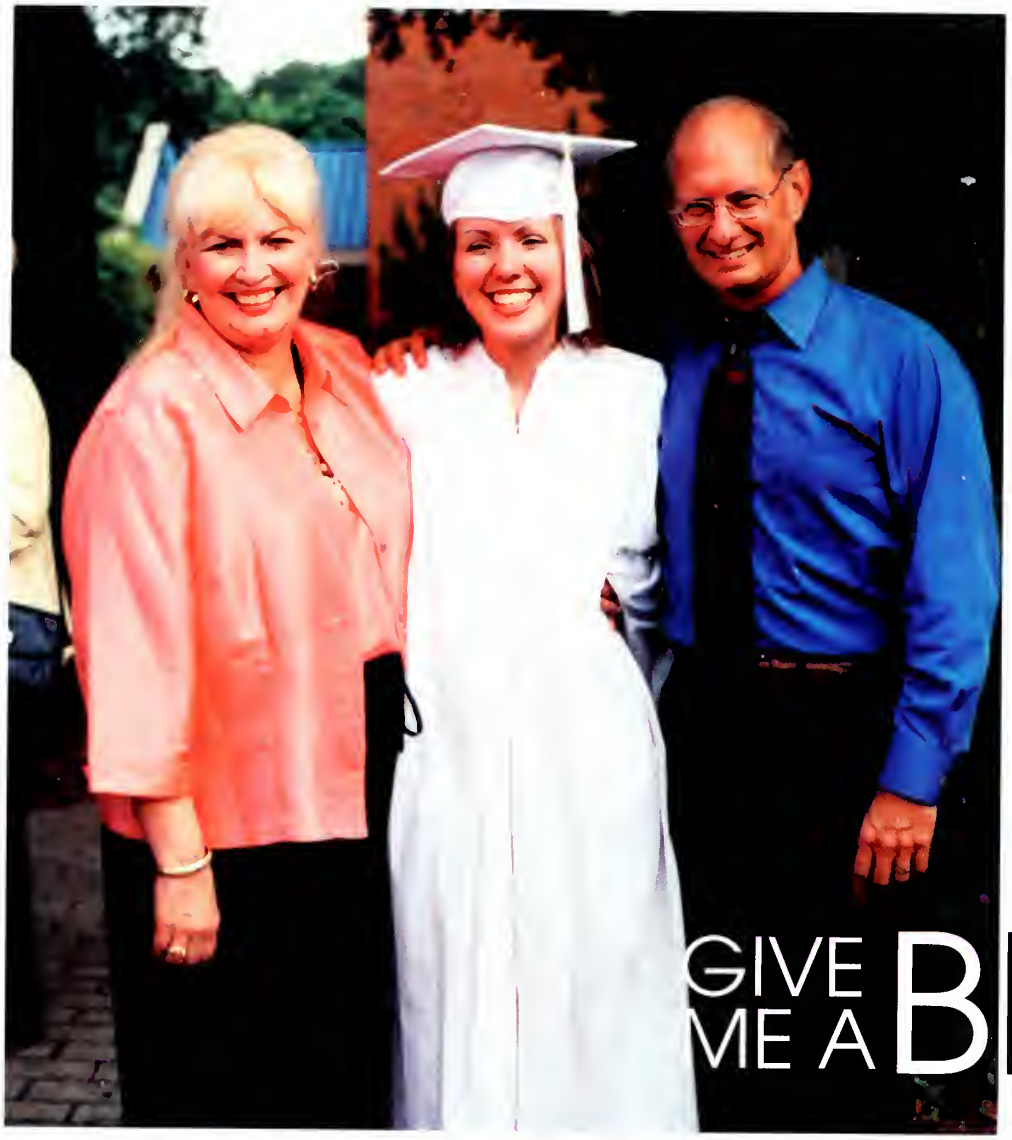
Italy

December 28, 2002 - January 8, 2003

The first annual business trip to Italy occurred over Christmas break. A group of 21 traveled from Lee under the direction of Mr. Jasso to study international marketing. The students traveled to Rome, Florence, Tivoli, and Capri. Public relations major Susanna Custer said, "My favorite part was visiting the Colosseum. It was sobering to see where so many Christians were martyred." Here, students are seen at an Italian villa.



GIVE ME A BREAK

The longest break from school, and therefore the most desired, leaves room for a wealth of activities for students after the campus empties. Most acquire some source of income to ensure their survival in the next year of college, and many spend quality time with family. There is time for hobbies, and other therapeutic means of recovering from school. However, the most classically memorable part of summer is the vacation. For Christy-Anne Jones, a freshman Pastoral Ministries major from Cleveland, the destination was Maui. When she graduated from high school, her dad Ken announced that he was sending her and her mom, Karen, on a trip to celebrate (left). At the end of July, 2002, two weeks marked her stay on the Hawaiian island with her mom and best friend. They arranged to stay for a mere 50 dollars a night at four star hotel Grand Wailea Resort, where a friend conveniently worked . . . proving that it pays to know people in high places. Christy-Anne, who grew up in Cleveland and went to high school in Chattanooga, enjoyed the opportunity she had to see more of the world.

SUMMER

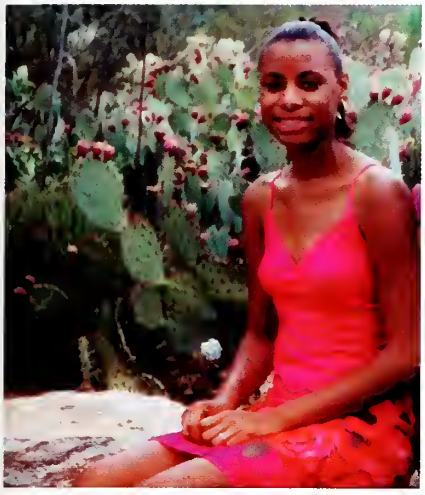
Most of the excitement that the summer held for Desmond Wellington revolved around his long awaited graduation. August 3rd, 2002, he became a free man after four years of hard work, and went away with a degree in Pastoral Ministries. His thoughts that day were, "I came to Lee, I studied, and I reached a great milestone in my life."

Biz Rasey, a freshman children ministries major with a heart for kids everywhere, spent most of her summer working 15 hour days at the American Red Cross City Day Camp for underprivileged youngsters. She also directed vacation bible school for the past two years in Ohio. She was a favorite to play games with, and a great sport.

Fall break hosted the marriage of Lee graduates Rachel Ann Land and Daniel Browder perfectly. The ceremony took place at the Darby House in Hilliard, Ohio, which was the luxurious estate of a prestigious horse farm. Courtney Gutenschwager and Bridget Land, both Lee students, attended as bridesmaids.

CHRISTMAS

When Lavon Kemp went home for Christmas, she went home to cacti and warm weather. A freshman Psychology major, she came to Lee from Tucson, AZ. Going home was a great chance for her to spend quality time with close friends she had left behind, and her best friend Lisa who is also a freshman at Lee.



Christmas break came and called Xan Overman home to Charlotte, North Carolina . . . home to his mother and waiting cat, Bert. He spent his time working at Express for Men, relaxing, and engaging Bert in much anticipated conversation. The highlight of the break was New Year's Eve, when he celebrated with friends at a party.

Jennifer Perkins, a senior Communications major with minors in history and music, spent time working at the Holiday Inn and taking care of her family. She also used her creative flair to handcraft all kinds of jewelry, work on crocheting, and sew clothing. Known as a 'renaissance woman,' she calls this artisan behavior "therapeutic."

The winter break between semesters usually surprises students with its luxurious length. At approximately a month, there is just enough time for the ambitious to make some money before and after the frenzied holiday madness. Other students preferred to fill idle days with sleep or behaviors patterned after vegetables. However, in the midst of this uneventful bliss, making plans for the break is a good idea because the days are sure to pass quickly. Among other things, scheduling a successful bonding event with friends was a must before the return to Lee. While some students were content to entertain guests at home, Kris Butz had his own plans for the 2002 Christmas break. A senior Youth Ministries major from 'Nati, Ohio, Kris recruited his buddies Nate Short, Aaron Hisle, and his twin brother to set out on a quest for powder in mid-December. They arrived in Snowshoe, West Virginia, on the 15th in order to be there during a special college weekend that boasted lower rates. The four of them had a keen time skiing together, and they stayed at the lodge until the 18th called them home. Chris relishes the chance he had to share his time and life with such good friends. It especially meant a lot to him that they joined in his passion for skiing during the break.

chapel and convocation

When asked why they came to Lee University, many students' answer was the Christian atmosphere. From classroom devotions to dorm-wide prayer meetings, the possibilities for spiritual renewal are endless. But the most popular outlet is chapel.

Every Tuesday, Thursday, and Sunday, students gather in the Conn or Dixon Center to join together in worship. Speakers range from hometown pastors to well-known professors to accomplished business professionals, and their stories are ones of growth, encouragement, challenges, and pain. The services usually include a sermon, singing, drama, and yes, sometimes even dancing.

Chapel is also a time for the various choirs and ensembles to share their talents and lead the student body in worship. Campus Choir, Voices of Lee, and the Symphonic Band are just a few of the groups that show their love for the Lord in song. Groups such as Acts of God and Kingdom Players often provide a dramatic approach to evangelism, as well as the drama team from Pioneers for Christ.

For a more laid-back chapel service, many students attend Alternative2 Chapel at The House on Wednesday nights. Speakers include professors, administrators, and sometimes even students. The small quarters provide an intimate setting for worship and Bible study.

Every fall and spring, tests and papers are put on hold for four days as the campus takes part in Convocation. This year, Lee was fortunate enough to have Pastor Loran Livingston, of Central Church of God in Charlotte, NC, in the fall semester and Pastor Tom Sterbens, of New Hope Church of God in Sevierville, TN, in the spring semester. The altars were filled every night as these two men touched the hearts and challenged lives under the annointing of God.

Chapel and convocation are a large part of the Lee University experience, helping to bring the campus together as a church family and not just another college.

Spiritual Life

"Spiritual Life clubs have made amazing leaps forward this year to unify their ministries. We have participated together in joint services, worked together with on-campus projects, and have even taken trips together. Ten years ago I don't think any of these things would have taken place. What was started this year will only grow in the years to come."

-Blaine Hamilton
(Pioneers For Christ)

With more spiritual life clubs on the Lee University campus than ever before, it might come as a bit of a surprise to see that these clubs are actually growing closer and uniting with one another more than ever. There have been a few key focus events and ministries on campus. Such focuses as discipleship, unity, and leadership training have become the common denominators among the many organizations.

Leaders of ministry groups have joined efforts and combined their strengths on many occasions this past year to see lives changed through their ministries. Following the example of Christ, ministerial leaders at Lee work hard to raise up others under them to carry on the ministries after they are gone. Through combining discipleship, unity, and leadership training the spiritual life groups at Lee have made an indelible impression on the lives of all the Lee students.

Lee students recognize that their college experience entails far more than the education they receive in the classrooms. Their social and spiritual growth during these transforming years will set the pace and direction for the rest of their lives. The fact that Lee has over a dozen separate spiritual life clubs is a testimony to the maturity and focus of the faculty and students. While students attending many other colleges fill their four years with a collage of drunken stupors and sexual experimentation, those attending Lee have found their time filled with opportunities to minister and help others. Many students come to Lee having never served in any form of ministry, yet four years later they leave with the boldness and ability to share the Gospel in almost any given form. There are clubs that take prayerful, yet firm, stands against abortion. Some minister the Gospel through drama and choreographed dance. And still others use their influence to exemplify Christ through on-campus leadership. Regardless of the method and medium that is used, the message is always the same, "For God so loved the world...".

"We've worked on focusing our ministry more on campus and gearing ourselves towards discipleship and leadership training."

Greek Events

The greek events at Lee have served as the backbone to the Lee social scene. Between the ten different greek clubs on campus there has at one time or another been an event for most every genre and taste. Students have had the opportunities to kick up their heals at DZT's Hoe Down, boogied the night away at TKO's 70's Night and reveal their on-stage talents with the Kappa Gongshow. There was masquerading on the mall with the girls of Epsilon, cruising on a river boat with the men of Chi, and the chance to indulge in the tropical festival at the Sigma Luau. There were events that called for celebrating in your pajamas and others that required tux's and evening gowns to be worn. So, whether students were getting soaked at Theta's H2Oak, sitting around bonfires at Upsilon's Sadie Hawkins, enjoying an evening of dining and music at Omega's Snowball, or downin' cider and chasin' pigs at Pi's Oktoberfest all the events served to create friendships and memories in the lives of those who participated.

Service with a Smile

Serving others - students hear about it every day, but how often do they really do it? Being a part of a Christian college and community, there is a lot of influence put on the way students serve each other and those less fortunate than themselves. Here at Lee University, service is not just something that students do, but it has become a lifestyle. Various student groups exist at Lee with the soul purpose of service. Bread ministry, Amnesty International, Backyard, and Inner Seed are just a few that reach out to the campus and community to share love and Christ with those who need him. Students who do not have enough time to get involved in one of these clubs have other outlets which they can serve through. Every November and early December the student leadership council is busy gathering boxes for Operation Christmas Child, and during the spring students pull out their athletic gear to support cystic fibrosis research through the Great Strides walk and 5K. Whether it is giving blood, or canned food to the Lee food bank, students have countless opportunities to serve one another and the surrounding community.

On a grand scale, Amnesty International is a global organization dedicated to upholding the standards laid out in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted and proclaimed by the General Assembly of the United Nations in 1948. The students involved in the group here at Lee share this vision by their commitment to informing the student body about global issues, and their resolve to stop torture, political abuses, prisoners of conscience and other crimes against humanity. To accomplish these impactful and ambitious goals, Amnesty International members attend informational meetings every Thursday night, plan campus events to discuss current issues, and write numerous letters to different heads of states. They want the world to know that someone is aware of unspoken issues, and cares enough to speak up.

Come One, Come All

Lee University offers a variety of events that are not just for clubs or academic groups, but for the campus as a whole. These events allow students the opportunity to meet new people, showcase their talents, or just have fun. During the fall, Lee's main event is Homecoming. The first weekend in November is when Lee rolls out the red carpet for returning alumni and prospective students. The weekend holds Lee Flames basketball games and the announcement of Homecoming court during half-time of the men's game. The spring semester has more events that students and faculty both enjoy. During February, things get a little crazy on campus as students prepare for Dorm Wars. Lee's on-campus students compete in wild events to see which dorm is the best. Some of Lee's talented female students brush up their act for Parade of Favorites. Various organizations elect representatives to participate in the event held in the Conn center during March. This year's Parade of Favorites was themed "The Roaring Twenties" and Amber Ratliff took home the title. April marks everyone's favorite event, Lee Day. Not only is there an abundance of free food but also live entertainment including the infamous 'Life at Lee' skits. The campus is spruced up for visitors while students come out of hiding to play frisbee in alumni park or talk with friends on the pedestal mall. No matter what time of year it is, there is always something going on at Lee University.

The Boys Next Door was a touching look into the lives of four roommates who live in a communal residence together: Barry, Lucien, Norman, and Arnold. What makes their relationship unique is the fact that they are all mentally handicapped in various forms and to different degrees. The story follows their escapades and the personal difficulties of Jack, a sincere but increasingly despairing social worker that looks after them. Discussing a topic hardly addressed in our day to day lives, the fall production was a bold move for the administration of Lee. Its director, Shane Fuller, explains that "the true nature of theater is controversial. It deals with things head on."

The spring production Finian's Rainbow follows the story of a leprechaun (Og) who seeks to retrieve his pot of gold from the Irish immigrant (Finian) who took it. With the largest set ever used at Lee, designed and constructed by technical director Jonathan Wills, and the cooperative efforts of choreographer Kathy Cheek and music director Ruth James, the play was nothing but impressive. The cast had their hands full, rehearsing lines, steps, and notes. Yet Kathy and Ruth described them enthusiastically as "the most diligent and easy to get along with students" they had ever met. Finian's director, Dr. Sharon Carbaugh, had the giant task of putting it all together. "This play has been a challenge. It's less well known than others, and that has its advantages and disadvantages," she explained. But where Fred Astaire lit up the show successfully on film, it was a tremendous milestone on the stage at Lee.

"Where's the Administration Building?"

It is easy to pick out the freshmen on campus - they are the ones who actually shower before their 8 a.m. classes. But for all their eagerness, freshmen add excitement to our campus. While the seniors are adjusting to the idea of life outside the Lee bubble, the freshmen are getting used to what is going on within it.

According to first year student, Paula Wirtz, "College is like middle school all over again." She might be on to something. Just like in junior high, upon coming to college for the first time, you have to reestablish yourself. New clubs, trying out for choirs, and playing intramural sports are just a few ways that freshmen get involved and find their niche. But there are always the pressures of adjusting to a new system of thought. "Expectations really change," Luke Hankns points out. But perhaps Josh Brown says it best – "No one really cares who I was in high school. They care about who I am now."

Freshmen make campus more honest and involved. And hey, if it were not for them, Dr. Conn would have no one to make fun of during chapel.

Why can't we be friends?

Despite age differences and levels of experience, somehow between August and May, all students at Lee, whether freshman, seniors, or somewhere in between, seem to become like one big family - the Lee family. Lee University provides students with an atmosphere where they can grow as individuals and together as a student body and learn more about future professions as well as spiritual matters.

SENIORS

"Where do I go from here?"

A wise man once said that today is the first day of the rest of your life. Of the many students on the Lee campus, no one understands the magnitude of that statement as fully as the seniors. For them, walking across the stage at commencement is more that just a chance to shake Dr. Conn's hand. It is the beginning of a new life, full of hope and fresh prospects.

Graduation is greeted with every emotion imaginable. Frank Walker, a sociology major, is excited about commencement, saying that even though he is not sure what the future holds, he is looking forward to it. Elizabeth Shiloh, a psychology major, feels the same way. Although she is still debating about graduate school, she confesses that she is "more sad than scared, but I definitely won't cry over not having to get up for class anymore."

Still others see graduation as merely another step in their academic process. Marcus McCain, a communications major and August graduate, will start graduate school just days after he walks the line. On a more sentimental note, Marcus points out the bittersweet irony of meeting new people just weeks prior to his departure. "It's funny how you meet new friends right before you graduate," he says. "I wish they would have come along sooner."

Whether they are happy, sad, or just plain ready to get out in the real world, almost all seniors can agree on one thing - the time they have spent at Lee has been time well spent.

SPORTS SPORTS SPOR

WHAT IS THIS SECTION ABOUT? This year's sports section is full of action shots, statistics, interviews and quotes from various Lee athletes and coaches. From intramural sports to the Flames basketball teams, the sports section gives the opportunity to become acquainted or refreshed with the sports aspect of Lee.

the section editor...

Ben, a double major in Communications (journalism) and Human Development, joined the Vindagua staff in the Spring. In addition to the yearbook, Ben divided his time between school, the Collegian, and work. Ben's diligence with this year's sport section made it successful, and his talent for design provided the sports pages with more than a list of statistics. This year's sports section incorporates the facts with various feature stories and what is new with the Flames.

"This week in Intramural Sports" is the coined voice message of intramural sports director Eric Eledge, announcing the deadline for team rosters or an upcoming all-night air hockey tournament. Who is the man behind the voice? Eric Eledge has been a full-time employee of Lee for six years, creating team schedules and organizing umpires. His other duties include reporting intramural growth and keeping only eligible and current Lee students playing in intramural sports because some just can't stay away from competition. He also teaches two classes at Lee, a one credit outdoor education class and a three credit backpacking and camping class.

Eric grew up in Calhoun, Tennessee, and attended Cleveland High School. He was the equipment manager for their football team. A former Lee undergraduate student, he received his master's in Outdoor Education from Southern University. Eledge has always loved sports. His hobbies include going to college football games and being outdoors. The majority of his weekends are spent traveling with the Flames' basketball team as their radio announcer.

Eledge admitted to a root beer drinking problem. In his office he has a collection of 30 different root beer bottles. He is close to his goal of watching a game at every Major League Baseball park. So far, he is 28 for 30. Eric is a fan of the Bruce Lee films and the popular Star Wars saga. But, he's sworn that he will not dress up in costume for the premieres. Eric feels that God "wants us to play, and hopefully we provide a wide array of avenues for students to fulfill that desire of having fun."

brandy golden

The familiar sound of a basketball sailing cleanly through the net fills the gym. Brandy Golden rounds for her turn at defense in the 5-on-5 intramural basketball tournament. Many students find intramural sports a great way to take time off from the day-to-day pressure of classes. For her, intramurals serve two purposes: "To do something I love, and to avoid the ever-dreaded freshman fifteen," she laughs.

A freshman Health Science major, Brandy finds time to balance her love for sports with good study habits. With her emphasis on fitness and wellness, she ensures that her morning routines consist of a vigorous physical workout before she has to head off to classes. Her work habits are also transferred into the classroom, where she maintains a high level of quality in her studies. Brandy's work has paid off into an above average GPA.

"I play to be competitive, meet people, and to stay in shape," Brandy comments, quickly adding, "and for the love of the game." This year alone she has participated in the Ultimate Frisbee and both the 3-on-3 and the 5-on-5 basketball tournaments. Her team, the Dirty Birds, is often front-and-center in the winners' circle.

If you're looking to catch Brandy when she's not working, studying, or exercising, try one of the basketball courts. Not there? She's likely to be tearing up Rec Center Park playing Ultimate Frisbee during a late afternoon game. Wherever she's found, she's giving her all for her teammates and her friends.

Lady Flames Soccer

With a new coach and new key players, the Lady Flames captured their first TranSouth Conference Tournament championship. Leading their regular season 13-7-1 record were senior captains Mamie Jo Bolding and Melissa Kauffman. Kauffman was also one of two Lee athletes to receive a 2002 NAIA All-American Scholar-Athletes award.

Sophomores Erlie Thelot and Marie Exume were selected to receive the All-American Honorable Mention award from the NAIA for their on-field performance. "We've had a great year and feel like this is the beginning of good things for our program," remarked coach Matthew Yelton. Nine players will return for the 2003-2004 school year and they have already signed seven new athletes.

Flames Soccer

Coach Henry Moyo and his mens' soccer team finished out the 2002-2003 season with a bang, advancing all the way to the NAIA Regional XI tournament. "The team has battled all year," Moyo mentioned, adding that he "could not have asked anything more of my players."

Three Flames teammates were selected to the NAIA All-Regional XI team: forward Philip Riley, defender Mesac Celeste, and midfielder Tousha Benjamin. The Flames were only one of two soccer teams in the NAIA Region XI that had three players selected to the All-Region team.

The 2002-2003 season was the first year for Coach Moyo with the men's team. After several years coaching the Lady Flames soccer squad, he has more than filled the shoes left for him as he led the Flames to bring in more wins this season, ending with a solid 11-9-1 season record.

This upcoming season is looking bright for the Flames as all three of their NAIA All-Region players are scheduled to return in force. With continued practice and improvement and promising new recruits on the way, the team will be a serious threat in the Trans-South Conference. Coach Moyo is "looking forward to having our three All-Region players returning in the fall to help direct our team for the 2003-2004 season."

Emily Cleveland placed well at the nationals as the whole team put forth a solid effort. Both Cleveland and Ashley Geyer were named to the NAIA All-Conference and All-Region teams.

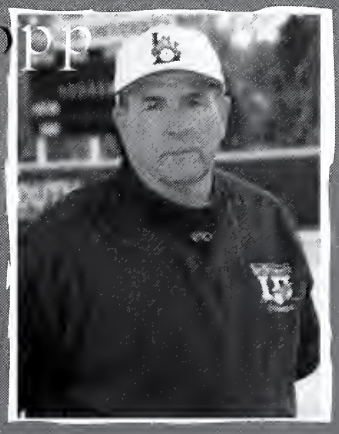
Doctor David Altopp? A baseball coach with a doctorate in education, he graduated in 1966 from Greenville College in Illinois. Coach Altopp played baseball in Greenville, where his primary positions were catcher and third base. Admitting that basketball was his first love, he played varsity basketball for Greenville for several years.

His life has been dedicated to coaching. Nine years of basketball coaching have been overshadowed by 36 years in the dugout. For the previous seven years, he has led Lee to several successful seasons. Today, he has over 600 career college-level wins.

dave altopp



This January, Coach Altopp was inducted into the NAIA Baseball Hall of Fame, following his induction into Greenville College's Athletic Hall of Fame in 2000. Dr. Altopp is also the president of the American Baseball Coaches Association, the national association of all levels of baseball coaches, from varsity squads to neighborhood youth programs. Coach Altopp has traveled to several countries, including Venezuela and Puerto Rico. He was the assistant coach of the 2000 NAIA team, which won the International Tournament held in Prague. He also coached the U.S.A. Olympic team trials in 1995.

His greatest joy as a coach is to see his players grow and be successful, developing their character in a positive way. His ideal is for the athletes to be men of integrity and character. All of the players that played four years for Altopp have graduated and this is Doctor Altopp's greatest accomplishment.

lady flames softball

Not only did the Lady flames receive a new field, they received a new head coach. Emily Moore, now with one year behind her as head coach of the Lady Flames' softball team, has hopes and plans to continue what she loves - leading her squad to victory.

Coach Moore is a Lee Psychology graduate and former Lady Flame. She holds the single season innings-pitched and strikeout records. Moore later earned her Master's in Teaching. She had just begun her Education career as a sixth grade teacher before getting the call from Lee. Though she now considers this opportunity to coach more appealing than her prior role, she hopes to one day return to the classroom. Until then, she wants to coach the game she loves.

emily moore

Moore has years of playing experience under her belt. She played pro-ball in Spain during the summer immediately after her graduation from Lee. The next summer was spent playing softball in Holland. She even learned a little Spanish and Dutch during her time overseas.

Besides improving her player's softball techniques, Coach Moore teaches the girls to stand up for what they believe in. She loves to see her players be competitive while remaining humble. She believes that they should keep a balance between their relationship with Christ and their desire to play softball.

ACADEMICS ACADEM-

WHAT IS THIS SECTION ABOUT? The Academics section has typically been a glance and turn section. But, with the addition of departmental features and objectives, this year's academic section will prove otherwise.

the section editors...

Nani Hesterly came on staff in the spring semester to complete the Academics section. As a senior communications major graduating in May, Nani split her time in the publications lab between the Vindagua and her participation in the school anthology also known as The Lee Review. An avid art student and a member of the art club C.I.V.A., Nani promotes the visual arts. The yearbook provided her with the experience and advancement of working with publications, and she in turn brought her calm and dependable demeanor to every staff meeting. Since coming to the staff almost midway into the second semester, Nani brought a freshness to the dividers and contents pages as well. Although having no explicit plans after graduation, Nani plans to include the visual arts in her life.

Nani Hesterly (Spring)

Serving as the academics editor during the fall semester, Meredith Cohen faced the challenge of completing her pages while participating as a member of Epsilon Lambda Phi, fulfilling the role of "little sister" for Theta, and keeping on top of her academic load as a science major. Meredith returned to the Vindagua as a second year editor, and pulled many of her section designs from her experience of working on last year's Lifestyles section. She also added a new twist to an otherwise predictable section by incorporating department pages that spotlighted events, goals, interviews, and information pertinent to that particular field of study. Thanks to her, more recognition was given to many academic endeavors than ever before. Meredith is pictured here with one of her Epsilon "sisters," Courtney Pitts.

LEE UNIVERSITY seeks to provide EDUCATION that integrates biblical TRUTH as revealed in the HOLY SCRIPTURES with truth discovered through the study of the arts and sciences and in the practice of various professions. A personal COMMITMENT to Jesus Christ as LORD and SAVIOR is the controlling PERSPECTIVE from which the educational enterprise is carried out. The FOUNDATIONAL purpose of all educational programs is to develop within the students KNOWLEDGE, appreciation, UNDERSTANDING, ability and skills that will prepare them for responsible LIVING in the modern WORLD.

It's difficult for students at Lee today to fully appreciate where this institution has been and where it may yet go. Few would know, for instance, that in the '80s, around the time many of this year's students were born, Lee was on the verge of closing its doors. In his Fall 2002 address to the faculty, Dr. Paul Conn talked about those difficult days when, for the first time, enrollments were down, the college had to let faculty members go, and many others had to take drastic pay cuts in order to keep the institution afloat. In those days, said Dr. Conn, the priority was survival.

Things have changed. Dr. Conn took over the helm of Lee College in 1986, at a time when the school was still wondering about the survival question. But with a series of big changes and a punishing fund-raising schedule, the new president helped take Lee around a corner that not only solved the survival problem, but created a whole new one. What exactly do you do with success?

Lee's success under Paul Conn is the envy of many schools of similar size around the country. In the last ten years enrollment at Lee has exploded, faculty hires have striven to catch up, new majors have been created, and new college buildings of all sorts have come to dominate this part of town. And the trend does not seem to be slowing down an time soon.

"We may be at another threshold," Dr. Conn said to the faculty. "Having dealt with survival and having experienced success, perhaps it's time for us to reach for another level, at becoming an institution of significance."

The Board of Directors. The name alone made them seem important, although most students on campus would not be able to pick them out of a crowd. However, the Board of Directors played a vital role in Lee University life. Though the faces were not familiar, their names could be found around campus; currently eight members of the board have buildings, auditoriums, or dorms named in honor of them or members of their family. The Board took care of business matters such as approving new buildings, deciding how the University's finances were handled, and facilitating any changes made to school policies. Stephanie Taylor, Administrative Assistant to the President, said of the Board, "They are our highest governing body. All important decisions about the campus go through them." The Board was most visible around the school this fall at the dedication of the new men's dorm, Bowdle-O'Bannon, held in early September. Members of the 2002-2003 Board include: Raymond Culpepper, Bill Sheeks, Cecil Brown, Patricia Carroll, Raymond Crowley, Bernard Dixon, Bill Higginbotham, Edward Hollowell, Kenneth "Deacon" Jones, Dennis Livingston, Stehen Lowery, Ronald Martin, Don Medlin, Quan Miller, Darrell Rice, Samuel Robeff, Gary Sharp, Lee Storms, and John White.

Bluegrass band "Mountain Gap" performs in the gazebo in Alumni Park during Appalachian Culture Week. The week- long event provided several experiences, including concerts, poetry, and lectures on different aspects of the Appalachian culture.

Our Appalachian Heritage

By Rainey Howarth

In October, Lee University conducted its Appalachian Culture Week, giving students the opportunity to experience and appreciate life in the Southern Mountains. Lee hosted seminars embracing the craft and diversity of Appalachian Culture, with special presentations on Saturday at The Museum Center at 5ive Points.

Starting the week, local folklorist Sylvia Idom played Appalachian music on the dulcimer. Friday, Knoxville poet Jeff Daniel presented Appalachian literature with readings from his own works. On Saturday, students enjoyed bluegrass group "Mountain Gap" in Alumni Park and displays of Appalachian art at the museum. Later that evening, the museum hosted "Mountain Echoes," a musical drama presented by the Ocoee Players and Storyteller's Guild. The next week, Dr. Dan Woods, of Ferrum College, discussed religion in Appalachia, with emphasis on the advent of modernism and the Pentecostal movement in the mountains, and Frank Villegas gave a seminar on Cherokee Indian culture. Closing the program was Ken Rush, Director of the Ducktown Museum, speaking on the local copper mining industry.

Students who registered for the Appalachian Seminar were required to attend the events, complete a journal of responses, and interview two artisans at Saturday's museum exhibit. All sessions were also open to the public, with participants attending the festivities for different reasons such as class credit, the desire to develop awareness for a new culture, and some were raised in Appalachia and came to celebrate their roots. Senior Marisa Poplin commented, "The Appalachian seminar is one of the most excellent courses I have taken here at Lee. As a Cleveland native it was nice to see this region represented and see students from other regions share in learning about our traditions."

There was something for everyone, and Dr. Waalkes noted, "Each person had their own favorite." The seminar was designed by Dr. Mary Waalkes, Dr. Murl Dirksen, and Dr. Donna Summerlin, in cooperation with Joe Hamiliton, Director of The Museum Center at 5ive Points. This was the first time Lee has collaborated with the museum for the seminar. Says Dr. Summerlin, "We enjoyed working with the museum and hope that the next time we do this we can draw in even more sectors of the community."

Organizers are counting this year's Appalachian Culture Week a great success. "All of the speakers did a great job," says Dr. Summerlin, "and the participants seemed to enjoy and benefit from each session. So many of the presenters commented on the thoughtful responses of the students and audience members, and this made me very proud of our Lee community." She added, "I want to compliment those who participated. It was a lot of hard work for us and for those who took the class at this busy time in the semester. Nevertheless, every night they came ready to listen and participate and reflected a genuine interest and enthusiasm that made all our efforts seem worthwhile."

The Incubator

by Sarah Creason

In the fall of 2001 the business department began its program known as "The Incubator." The program was developed with the purpose of giving students a real world business experience, allowing them to have a key role in the management of running a small business. This program was established through the Lee Institute for Business Development.

The first small business opportunity that arose for the program was the small service station on the corner of Ocoee and 20th street. The station had been part of Cleveland since the 1930s and served as the main business run by the Incubator. The goal of this station was to help students have more hands on experience in a small business. Mr. Craig Sarine, faculty head of the project, said that a main focus of the station was "to help make students more successful. After graduation when they are applying for a job, this type of experience is what is going to make them stand out to a future employer."

Another project the Incubator took on this year was the "Coffee Cafe," a cart that could be found at various locations and events around campus. The station was launched on Homecoming weekend with the goal of a strong start and making those on campus aware of the new cart. The business ran into its first problem when the cart did not arrive in time for the opening weekend, but a table was set up so the business could still get going.

The Incubator helped supply students with experience they would not otherwise have received, and taught them lessons that would last beyond graduation.

TE"LEE"COMMUNICATION

by Sarah Creason

The year brought about many new elements for the audio labs in the Communication department. Not only did the lab move to another location in the basement of the Dixon Center, the department also acquired improved equipment. Students' use of the new equipment allowed them to experience real technology in a small setting.

One of the numerous projects taken on by Telecommunication students was Lee TV. With the goal of capturing campus events on films, students were found at most major gatherings ready to preserve the moment. Lee TV also produced a coach's show during basketball season.

Another project produced by the students in the audio lab was the video yearbook. These students had the same goal as those focused on Lee TV: to help portray the events that occured throughout the year on campus. In addition to the new lab in the Dixon Center, students also used two different editing labs, as well as a television studio room.

A new year brought about new changes, technology, and locations. As a result, Lee Communication majors found themselves challenged and eager to experience the tasks that were ahead of them.

Creativity At Work

by Meredith Cohen

Look anywhere around campus and you will almost certainly see them engrossed in conversation about any number of topics. "Language connects human beings," says senior English major Anissa Adams, who is also getting a minor in Spanish, "and EMFL majors are passionate about what they are learning." Their eagerness to learn and connect is manifested in projects like the Lee Review and The Writing Center, where English (and other) majors are hard at work helping others devolop their writing skills.

The department's faculty is hard at work also, developing programs to enhance learning and career oppurtunities for their students. "We are seeking out better and creative ways to serve students," says Dr. Eledge, Chair of the Department of English and Modern Foreign Languages. The department approved a new writing minor to give students exposure to writing in their chosen field at the college level, and the program will complement any major, according to Dr. Eledge. Also developed recently is the Alumni Advisory Council. The council consists of eight Lee alumni who have ventured into a variety of fields with their English or Modern Foreign Language degree. Their specialty areas include education, law, publication, foreign language translation, library science, and beyond. The council stands to offer their expertise to EMFL majors who will transition from college to the working world. s

The Department of Natural Sciences and Mathematics received grant money to fund a number of different research projects for students and faculty. Funded by major organizations such as the Baltimore and Detroit Zoos, and the Smithsonian Tropical Research Institute, Dr. Erik Lindquist led students in an ongoing research project in Panama called "Proyecto Rana Dorada,"or the "Golden Frog Project." The team conducted research on the Golden Frog of Panama to educate the people about it and promote the conservation of the species. Senior Scott Sopasnik has traveled to Panama four times with Dr. Lindquist for this research project, and for him it has proven to be a valuable educational experience. "You find out exactly how to run research and how much organization is needed. It has been an eyeopener about how much education is needed in a lot of different fields." Participation in research programs like "Project Golden Frog" gives students exposure to methods, correlation, and publication of research.

Biochemistry major Emily Grace Brannon was a student participant in an Education research program with Dr. Johnny Evans and Dr. Bill Estes in which the team received grant money to bring Tennessee teachers to Lee's campus to better equip them for teaching science in their schools. The team designed labratory exercises and demonstrations for the program's participants, and grant money provided equipment for teachers to take back to their labratories. "It was a refreshing experience for teachers who had not had some subject areas since their undergraduate classes, and for others getting new equipmment was like Christmas in July because many of them have never had more than $300 to spend from their school budgets. The workshop also introduced me to career options that most science majors don't usually think about," said Emily.

We could picture them sitting at their desks, neatly situated one row after the next. The anticipation of a new school year would radiate from each face. We wondered what kind of impact we would have in their lives. Would we someday be the teacher they look back on to call the best? We were prepared to cultivate the next generation of individuals from this group of little people with pure hearts and open minds. We could only imagine the endless possibilities.

Department Health

By Ty Brown

The Health and Human Performance Department at Lee is rapidly growing. Premiering only three years ago, the department now has five majors with two of them, Physical Education and Health Education, having K-12 teaching licensers. Also, the Athletic Training program is scheduled to receive national accreditation sometime next year. The other two majors are Recreation and Health Science/Fitness Wellness.

Nearly 100 students are presently majoring in one of the five areas of study for health and human performance and that number is expected to grow. The main focus of the department is not only to educate its students, but to spread the advantages of maintaining good health throughout the campus. Chairperson, Dr. Mark Wickam, is very enthusiastic about the departments' growth as well as maintaining health throughout life. Referring to physical activeness Dr. Wickam said, "the decisions we make today affect our lives..." He asked that the one thing he would like all students to realize is that one can perform better and enjoy life more when in healthy physical condition. Whether it be preaching, teaching, accounting, or especially parenting, we will perform theses tasks better if we are healthy and have more energy.

One plus One equals One

by Nani Hesterly

The Teaching and Learning Department is undergoing restructuring beginning next year. The secondary programs are merging with the Health and Human Performance programs. Although new names for the programs will be in order, many aspects will remain. The methods courses will remain as the most anticipated among students. Methods allows students to become familiar with the classroom setting, and gives the students the opportunity to work and help students in K-12.

The right of passage education students must achieve in order to graduate proves to be a remarkable foundation for future teaches. This is a pure reflection of their professors. Chairperson, Dr. Pamela Browning, confirms this reflection, "The instructors in the Department of Teaching and Learning model service in a Christlike manner...they transmit their concern for students and sense of calling to prospective teachers." Dr. Browning and the faculty emphasize the ministry involved with teaching, "Teaching is a profession that lends itself to service and to giving of oneself to others."

With their objective at hand, the joining of the two departments will no doubt be a success.

We could see ourselves on a stage somewhere; in front of a crowd, maybe a church congregation, or a producer on the other side of the soundproof window. We started bands and sang in choirs. It was music we took in and music we put out. This passion consumed us, and we hoped to convey it to all who would listen.

Success's Song

By Julia Mollahan

Chapel services provide ample opportunities to listen the various vocal groups the School of Music offers. Of course, what one experiences while listening to the different groups is a product of long hours of rehearsing and teamwork. The School of Music offers its candidates not only the efforts of a dedicated staff, but also the tradition of success before and after graduation. Students who graduate from the department acquire insight that will make them appealing to the music industry, from Christian contemporary to classical music and opera. The students are being prepared for what opportunities there are beyond Lee University.

Community involvement has enriched the music department beyond expectations. For example, the community is willing to be a part of the music department by allowing a children's chorale to form. Young boys and girls from the ages of nine to thirteen are eligible to be a part of the chorale. Students are able to encourage these young people and give them a chance to come together and sing.

The vocal program is growing and provides an exciting challenge for its students. Along with growth comes a lot of hard work, both for the faculty and on the students. Faculty want the best program they can offer, and that requires a lot of extra time and review. The students benefit from the time their instructors place into class preparation. Students are challenged in the department, as Andrea Dismukes commented, "When they come in, they are one way and they leave changed." They change into musicians with a wider expertise and a trained ear to get them where they need to be in life. They are a product of Lee University School of Music and when they leave, they add to the tradition of success.

Instrumental Growth

BELOW: Milton Gardner demonstrates his passion for the piano.

Lee students and the community alike stand in awe of the Instrumental Department of the School of Music. They stand in awe of the rapid growth of the department. The Instrumental Department is bigger than it has ever been and with that, the students are even out-growing the faculty. Academically, the Instrumental Department has a strong tradition and the future only adds to its strength.

The School of Music has pushed toward making the Instrumental Department strong and successful. Thus far, everything desired has been obtained or is close to the point of breaking through. The accomplishments have been ranked, the faculty are enthusiastic, and the students are geared up to become even better than the tradition has called for.

The Instrumental Department is growing faster with more students enrolled this year than ever. Consequently, the growth of the students is causing the faculty to grow as well. Nationally acclaimed musicians are being attracted to Lee's program while giving it more strength and depth. The continual growth has inspired the department to dream bigger.

The future looks bright for Lee University Instrumentalists; a new program of study has opened this fall than encompasses both departments of the School of Music. The bachelors of Science and Music has given Lee musicians a new attraction and course of study. It is the second new degree program that has started at Lee in the past two years. Along with new degree programs, the department is increasing in the ensembles being offered. More chamber music is being put together and a goal for a full blown orchestra symphony is in the making. Dr. Phillip Thomas comments, "There are more instrumental majors in the history of the school. It is an exciting place to be."

Our finite minds tried to grasp as much of the infinite as was humanly possible. We had to take on Christ so that we might reflect Him. We took time to be sheep in order to prepare ourselves to be shepherds. We listened to tales of those who have gone before us and absorbed wisdom for when it would be our turn to go out to into the nations.

Small but Mighty

By Nani Hesterly

The Department of External Studies is a tremendous asset to Lee University. Their willingness to extend their courses beyond tradition and embrace technological advantages has proven valuable. With 84 online courses offered and extensions where geography inhibits logical transportation, it's no wonder Dr. Benjamin Perez is enthusiastic about the department. In regards to short term advancements, he anticipates expansion of online courses with the addition of 1-3 every year. In department growth, prospects of programs developing overseas is likely. Kenya, Guyana and the Caribbean Islands are the potential countries for the department programs.

Another interesting aspect of the department is their ownership of the Campus Print Shop. This somewhat unknown printshop is accessible to students, clubs, and faculty. Dr. Perez emphasized their competitiveness and reasons for using the print shop, and "the money spent in the campus print shop stays on campus."

This small but mighty department, with only two full time faculty members, is making an impression in the School of Religion and Lee University. The convenience they give to individuals to receive a Lee education is astounding. Dr. Perez comments, "our agenda is to prepare pastors in ministry to do ministry better." With this convenience, the department will grow and so will the ministry.

Role Preparation

by Meredith Cohen

This year the Department of Christian Ministries debuted a Children's Ministry major, presenting students with the opportunity to study the role and duties of a children's pastor, succuessful models and methods of children's ministry, children's programming and how children learn and grasp the concept of God and religion. The new children's ministry program developed in repsonse to a request from the Church of God Youth and Christian Education Department, which recognized children's ministry as a growing need throughout the churches of many denominations. Many students will benefit from this new focus of ministry as the demand for graduates to assume children's pastor positions has increased with this growth in the area of children's ministry. Students were required to spend between 100 and 150 hours working in a supervised children's ministry program, affording the opportunity for hands on experience in working with children in church programs. The department of Christian Ministries is also developing a minor in the area of children's ministry which will complement several programs in the College of Education, and prepare those who are already on track to work with children for effective ministry in their chosen fields.

A Resourceful Major

By Nam Hesterly

TOP: Students in 1st year Greek class.
BELOW: Any Coffin requests feedback on scripture from Dr. Simmons.

The Theology department is a popular major among students. The attention is solely placed upon the Bible and students seeking a greater depth in scripture. This major provides students with the discipline to keep them enthusiastic about scripture and Christian Theology.

Of course, while not being provided with many options in the typical work force, theology students may acquire another path. The critical thinking skills can be utilized in a Christian school or church. The discipline of study can lead to advancement to higher education. The passion for scripture and the love of God's people can persist into ministry. Theology students are in no way barred from success.

The successfulness of students is due to the dedication of the faculty. Dean, Dr. Terry Cross, comments, "I think the appeal is that its faculty is passionate about the thinking process in educating its students. This degree/major equips students in a variety of ways for future service."

Many students decide to change their majors after taking a Bible elective or the freshman Testament courses. The professors present a thorough knowledge and insight to students and reveal a balance between theological and historical studies. With this foundation, theology students and faculty are a tremendous resource to this campus and society.

PEOPLE PEOPLE PEOP

WHAT IS THIS SECTION ABOUT? The people's section highlights the students who attend Lee. However, this year's section features student photography, sketches, paintings, poetry, and prose as well. The intermingling of students and their creations makes looking for friends a fine arts experience.

Liz not only helped create a one of a kind Lifestyles section this year, she also single-handedly put the entire people section together . . . which was not an easy task. Liz said the biggest challenge she faced in putting this section together was "fitting the poetry into the designs without changing the layouts and thus their meanings." This section not only displays the lovely faces of the students at Lee but also their art, poetry and other creative works.

Liz Schirmers

The photography of the artwork displayed in the people's section was provided by Ken Haan of Knoxville, TN. He graciously donated his time and talents into helping make this year's Review great, and more packed with artwork than ever before. The Lee Review is a student publication, which seeks to glorify God through the arts. Many students, teachers, and alumni are represented in this year's collection. The Vindagua thanks the creators of the Review for contributing to the yearbook, and spending the great amount of time and energy that it takes to publish student work in such a detailed fashion.

Un Amour Comme Swann

La peinture de ma vie c'est impressioniste, et la musique que j'entends c'est classique.
Et moi, je rêve du temps perdu
et de tout l'amour que tu ne m'a pas rendu.
Et je sais que tu ne reviens jamais.

Je prie à Proust de changer ma vie, mais il ne m'écoute pas; il est mort aussi.
Et moi, je rêve du temps perdu
et de tout l'amour que tu ne m'a pas rendu.
Et je sais que tu ne reviens jamais.

Je reflechis en mon passé.
Et je prie pour plusieurs annees.
Il faut me réveiller du temps perdu
et de tout l'amour que tu ne m'a pas rendu.
Et je sais que tu ne reviens jamais.

Maintenant je connais très bien le realité et c'est pas en mes pensées.

-Marisa Poplin

In English, the title of this poem is "A Love Like Swann's." It was written as a reflection on the book Un Amour de Swann by Marcel Proust. Shortly afterwards, it was set to music and sung at the Spring 2002 induction of Pi Delta Phi, the French Honor Society. Its tune and lyric qualities were said by Dr. James Wilkins to be comparable to those of the French musician Francis Cabrel.

Student Showcase

The Lee University student body is filled with diverse creativity and inspiration. In a variety of ways, students find the art of self-expression essential to day to day living. This includes poetry, prose, photography, ceramics, and a whole host of illustration mediums. Nikki Stenkiewicz pursues photography, producing fascinating work like this close-up shot of tree bark (right). A favorite medium of Nani Hesterly is ceramics. Though it is tough to convey concepts in clay, she is up to the challenge. In two terra cidgelatta surface treatment vessels and one raku fired platter, all of them bound by aluminum wire, Nani catches attention instantly (below). Rarely seen demonstrated by a college student, Bethany Stanfield is gifted in quilting. Her detailed work is both stunning and comforting (opposite page).

Ever inspired by the natural world, Elisabeth Schirmers captures one moment in the fleeting life of a flower with the use of watercolor (right). The painting poses strategic bursts of color to draw the eye towards its bright yellow center nestled in the midst of a contrasting deep fuchsia. A senior Communications major, Elisabeth enjoys taking the time to admire such beauty.

A Reflection on Love . . .

Some say Love is a driving passion, a roaring flame, an all-encompassing desire. They say it causes its prisoners to lose their senses, abandon their self control and throw away their inhibitions. And all this is true . . .

But we must never forget that this is just the surface of love. No, true Love is so much more . . . it is deeper than mere emotion, higher than the eagle's flight; stronger than the raging ocean, as endless as the black-blue night.

Love demands our full attention - there can be no halfway allegiance where love is concerned. It requires us to forsake all else for its cause, and compels us to sacrifice ourselves daily for our loved ones.

This fascinating design was created by Joel MacCaughey (left). In swirling repeated patterns he reveals and captures the mystery of the human body. The work has a very fluid sense of motion that sends the man sprawling and serves to inspire the viewer to explore the dimensions of his or her living potential. The flat background draws special attention to three-dimensional form and shape.

The most striking of images is sometimes the most simple. In this close-up shot of the end of a railing, David Albala captures the beauty of such simplicity (below). In things commonly seen as normal or ordinary, he sees art and inspiration. For example, the mathematical perfection of this spiral is overwhelming and strangely lovely to the viewer. It alludes to the presence of the Divine Creator.

It asks us to forgive and forgive again and again. It sees the shortcoming, but blinds itself to the discord in the one we love, choosing rather to focus on the music their life brings, and on the symphony created through the harmony of your lives together.

It knows no time, succumbs to no fear, and acknowledges no master save God Himself. Love is Joy awakened, Peace resting, Patience lived, Humility embodied, and Hope glorified.

Yet for all its majesty, grandeur, and strength, love is also gentle. True love comes not only swiftly and with power - as flashing lightning in the night sky - but softly, and with sweetness - as a warm breeze blows on a Spring day. It deftly creeps into your life, not meaning to intrude . . . quietly it makes itself at home in the innermost corridors of your heart. Uninvited, yet somehow welcome, it lies unnoticed until that glorious morning you awaken and find you are no longer alone.

There's a man with broom and smile
Who tells me how old he is.
He wants to retire, I want to live.
He has worked towards 'someday'
Like an ice cream cone
And works as it melts into yesterday's garbage chute.

I want to live.
But he keeps telling me he's old,
Smiling that paint retouched for years,
Holding on to the one thing
Remaining after taking out the trash:
(All that time spent, gone, gives him)
our 'respect.'

He wants my respect.
He asks for it while I am here
With my broom, before it gets cold
While I am living, somewhere else.
He asks as he tells me I'm young.
Turning back to work with sticky hands I think:
Yes, I know.

But I've lived longer.

Bursting with spheres of violet and shafts of forest green, this photo by Niki Stenkiewicz beckons the viewer to stop and take notice of the transitory things in life (right). Here today, but gone tomorrow. Like these flowers, life itself is a fragile thing worthy of grateful scrutiny.

Three-dimensional space is captured in this photo creatively by David Albala (below). The viewer gets the feeling that he or she is hidden within that space, surrounded by the trees. A small treasure box, the nest of a bird, waits quietly for someone to come look inside at its contents.

A girl retreats within the silence of her mind in this pencil work by Joy Martinez (left). The viewer cannot help but wonder what she is thinking about. This modern day John the Baptist was created by Joshua Leavitt (below). In familiar, but seedy garb, this man seems ready for anything.

Dancer

Mirth and joy
Dancing in the rain
Brown waves twirling
In the light
Arms outstretched
Embracing the clouds
A laughter and beauty
So moving, so sweet
I stand, awed by the sharing
Honored by the sight
A simple, amazing moment
Immensely moving
Childlike innocence
Sheathed in a woman

Heavy-Handed

Beneath a church with god-colored
Windows and careful statues, a
Skirt the shade of unhealthy grass
Holds a sleeping Italian baby.
Eyes small and dark and tired
Ask for a hard day's anything –
For progress
For accomplishment
For pride.
Life's what it is, Lady, and if I could

In yet another example of beautiful simplicity, David Albala takes a closer look at the commonplace water fountain (right). The polished metal displays its contours in soft, fluidly bending reflections of light. Even the beads of water drip with shape.

The oddities of life never escape Nikki Stenkiewicz. Even such a hidden treasure as this camoflaged frog on a tree is deemed worthy of scrutiny (left). It is quite a task, but equally rewarding to take the time to be curious about the mysteries of the natural world.

In the chaotic midst of abstract color and line, art becomes even more subjective. The beauty of this painting by Chris Sarine is in its freedom (below). The viewer is able to interpret it however he or she sees fit. The bright colors and haphazard geometry leave space for the imagination.

Give you a shiny desk in a clean office
And a pair of professional navy pumps, I would.
But a couple thousand lira instead –
Does that buy a National Geographic
Might look like tears if I can just Use the right shutter speed?
It would impress even Brokaw.
Two thousand will let
You pee in a hole twice in Florence.
It's a steal – two trips to a rest room
For your face forever.
I'll even say, "God bless you" –
Make us both feel better –
You can hope he actually will,
And I can clear my conscience
In this hellish sun.
That's it, give us a – well,
Don't smile too much.
I want Brokaw to buy it.
Look a little lost.
Tilt your head a bit more towards your child.
Dirty angel, true mother,
Rest with an infant's head in one hand,
Two thousand lira in the other.

Power in the Calm

the sword was exquisitely wrought and it danced as a butterfly in the master's hand
as his footwork traversed the well-worn track of training the blade danced a glistening duet by his side, weaving a web about him that sparkled as a spider's in the diamond dew

the master himself, his body so fluid as if he and blade were a river rushing in tandem down a mountain through raging rapids and tumbling waterfalls

and as the foot rested in its final step, sword landing from it's intricate flight through the winds,
the master's motion paused and ne'er was that blade more strikingly lethal
than when, in that moment,
it was in stillness held.

-Zachary Jones

This unique and bold print was created by Joel MacCaughey (right). He uses a variety of black and white tesselations to form the shapes of bodies, yet leave them open to interpretation.

Eternus Veritas, Eternus Amor, Eternus Amicitia

Forever is the night that holds us in its hands, so dark and yet so light, mechanical at times through a completely chaotic universe of uncontrolled perfections.

Splendid are the stars, little gateways to dimensions uncharted, fortified by power in all aspects of their glory, blistering with energy of unacquainted science.

Paradoxical are the movements of particles and matter in such a random order to create the perfect being.

The paramount of astronomical clarity, the moon is seeing everything, under it we live our lives knowing that it knows.

Like a majestic sunrise, we await what adventure we will embark. Like a perfect sunset, we take turns exploring the enigma that is Earth.

CLUBS CLUBS CLUBS

WHAT IS THIS SECTION ABOUT? The clubs section, true to its name, represents most of the clubs on campus. The pages cover as much about the clubs as possible, from the events that they sponsor to the recognizing of various members and mottoes.

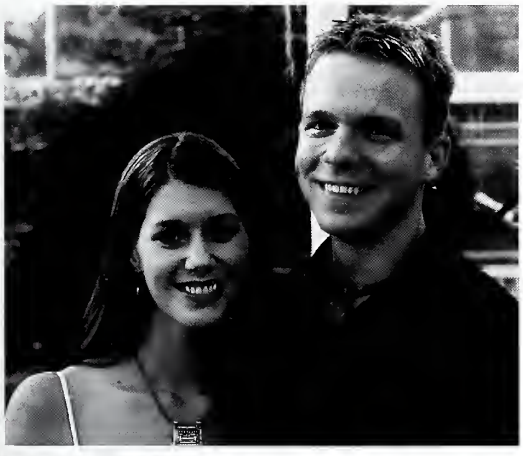
the section editor...



Buck Yates, a newly married Communications major graduating in May, came on staff during the spring semester as the Clubs editor. Having also functioned as the Youth and Media minister at Church of Life in Madisonville, Tennessee, Buck brought a great deal of experience and enthusiasm to the Vindagua publication. In his spare time Buck enjoys leading worship with his wife, participating in a traveling drama ministry, and experimenting with cooking endeavors. In the future Buck sees himself as always participating in some sort of ministry as well as pursuing and managing his own entrepreneurial businesses. As far as his involvement in the yearbook, Buck says, "I'm just in it for the money guys. But the work has given me further experience in layout design and professional publications." Buck is pictured at left with his wife Jenny at their wedding rehearsal last July.

Jessica Fentz, originally hired on as the Vindagua office manager, also made herself the official staff motivator. In addition to her daily duties, she made the historical move of decorating the Vindagua office, helped contact the clubs and organizations on campus for the section, and assisted with the information gathering for the student showcase section. As far as the future, Jessica wants to work with teenage celebrities as a talent agent, functioning doubly as an agent and a mentor. During the few hours a week that she is not in the office Jessica engages in playing the piano for the PFC worship team and also in participating in the traveling drama team, Acts of God. Of the Vindagua Jessica says, "I am exceedingly grateful for the opportunity to work in an environment with such creative and goofy people. Hey, it beats flipping hamburgers."

These groups also offer students the chance to hear experts in psychology speak on their professions.

Phi Beta Lambda

Though the business world is often perceived as a grueling place, the members of Phi Beta Lambda (PBL) work to reverse this common conception. PBL makes it possible for members and non-members alike to improve their appeal to future employers by hosting resume workshops and having influential men and women come and share with the students. Truett Cathy, founder of Chik-Fil-A, was one of the businessmen whom Lee was honored to have speak this year. Though few students know the compassion and concerns of Phi Beta Lambda, this club is doing all it can to have a dynamic influence on campus.

P.R.S.S.A.

The P.R.S.S.A. (Public Relations Student Society of America) has been making an impact on Communication majors at Lee for the past two years. Starr Kelly, President of the club, says that, "P.R.S.S.A. is the greatest opportunity for PR majors to get introduced to the world of Public Relations." This organization attends conferences, holds frequent meetings on campus, hosts guest speakers and even stages school emergencies to give the students realistic situations to work with.

RIGHT The leaders of P.R.S.S.A., Susanna Custer, Jillian Sample, Kristen Powless, Cindy Costa, Starr Kelly, and Patty Silverman meet to attend "Boot Camp" in order to get in shape for the upcoming year.

the Council for Spiritual Unity

A pivotal, though perhaps lesser known, group on the Lee campus is the CSU. What makes it so special is the fact that it consists of members from every spiritual life club, and so for good reason one must mention it when discussing the topic of spirituality at Lee. Every Tuesday at 4 o'clock the CSU meets to quietly carry out its pivotal mission. The council serves foremost to bring unity among the spiritual life clubs. In doing this, its goal is to impact and minister to the campus by putting on events that will inspire, encourage, and motivate the student body. The funds held by the council are dispersed among the clubs to cosponsor and help them put on events of their own. This year it put on events such as the special CSU chapel service in the Conn center, Hunger Awareness Week, the Veggie-thon at the end of the fall semester, the International Consort of Prayer during Missions Week, the spring finals event "Free" which featured a band flown in from Idaho, the CSU retreat, See You at the Pole, Koinonia, and the anticipated Spiritual Life Banquet.

The council followed the leadership of chairperson Tonya Venable during the spring semester. Though it was her first semester as chair, she served as secretary previously for a year and a half. For her, the CSU has been a blessing. Since she is not a member of any particular club, the council is her club. It has become a family unit to her. "It's really cool to see new presidents step in and watch them grow throughout the year, and see the way that individual ministries change and grow. I am blessed to have this different perspective than those that are involved in separate clubs." At the last meeting, the council showed Tonya their appreciation for her inspired leadership by giving her a warm round of applause along with flowers and a cake. With an impressive history, the CSU has yet more impacting things to accomplish for the kingdom of God.

The best word to describe Acts of God is "family." This traveling drama ministry group has about a twelve-year tenure at Lee, beginning officially in 1991 with only six members. Their mission is to take the message of the gospel of Jesus Christ to those who need it and to stir believers into worshiping with their lives by using the vehicle of drama. They want to use the gifts that God has given them to bless other people, and in turn to develop them to be more effective once they leave the team. Monday and Wednesday nights they meet to rehearse, with a devotion before practice on Wednesday. Most weekends they tour, either overnight or during the day, and on long breaks from school they usually tour to places farther away such as Florida or Texas. Twice Acts of God has gone international by traveling to Romania in the summer of 1999 and Trinidad in the summer of 2001. The services in the past have consisted of a series of two to ten minute sketches threaded together with a common message. Currently, the team is undergoing renovations that will take them into presenting thirty to forty-five minute one-act plays instead, and much time and effort is going into preparations.

David Albala, the student coordinator for the past year, has helped usher Acts into this change. For him, it has been "a blessing to work with such a dynamic group of people who share the same passion and love for God. If it wasn't for my being on the team, I wouldn't have had half of the meaningful experiences that I've had at Lee." Chris Farrel, who is looking forward to becoming student coordinator next year, shares this love for the beauty of Acts. "The team has been a family to me . . . a source of spiritual leadership. They really care and have a place for me, always making me feel loved and giving me an outlet for the things I love."

PFC

One of the oldest and most diverse groups on campus is Pioneers for Christ. Almost any type of ministry imagined possible is pursued by its members in a number of smaller groups. PFC is the beautiful combination of a drama team, a dance team, a worship team, and a whole host of other impacting sections.

Their mission is to search God out and find where His heart is for ministry, and more specifically, to be concerned with uniting the campus. They want to see people from all walks at Lee, whether it be Greek club members or spiritual life club members, come together and pursue God in unity.

As a whole, PFC's vision is to go wherever Christ is not shown. Either through working hand in hand with churches or out on their own, they go to communities that need Jesus most. Jesse Schroeder, current member and president of Pioneers for Christ, has taken up the reigns that Blaine Hamilton (the previous president) left him. He has caught hold of the new vision for this year and ran with it. "That's really what the name means to us . . . that we are pioneers in the fact that we go where no one has made a way before. We go wherever Jesus is not in order to show Him to those who are desperate for Him."

The group actively participates in events such as Campus Wide Service Day, Chattanooga Homeless Invasion, and other service-oriented functions.

Otherwise known as Youth Leaders Association, YLA is a student group dedicated to all types of youth ministry. With weekly meetings on Tuesdays at seven-thirty, the group shares a love for ministering to each other and kids of all ages. During the school year, their main focus was on helping out the Boys and Girls Club centers on Third Street and Lay Street. On Thursday nights, they went over with Bible lessons, studies, and spent free time to just hang out with the kids.

The president of YLA this year was from West Virginia. Kendall Terry, who served in the office for one year, definitely enjoys the club because "it's a fun place to be. We like to see ourselves as a youth group for college students where just about anyone can fit in." YLA will see a new president next year, Corie Winfrey, who is confident and excited about her upcoming role. Originally from Nashville, she served as an officer this past year and worked with the Boys and Girls Club on Third Street. "I am very excited about this new position and I have big goals to meet for next year," she said. Being a part of YLA has been a blessing to her because it allowed her to broaden her horizon of what Christ wants her to do and where He wants her to go. Even though she is not a youth ministry major, it has been a place where she "could get plugged in." With a new year on the horizon, the Youth Leaders Association is looking for more people interested in serving young people and working outside the box to reach beyond the boundaries of race, creed, and color. It is a great place to be discipled in day to day Christian living, no matter what field one will go into after Lee.

Publications

Everyone knows that Lee has powerful choirs, a strong evangelical atmosphere, and wonderful faculty members, but what they might not realize is that Lee excels in publications as well. Lee has three divisions of publications: the Vindagua (yearbook), the Collegian (newspaper) and the Lee Review (annual literary magazine). These publication teams are backed by some of the most elite faculty and students at Lee. They have won national awards and brought a lot of focus on Lee's campus through their quality and excellence. They also serve to inform the students at Lee of current events, to capture the essence of each year for successive generations, and to provide a forum in which the creative minds on campus can manifest themselves. Both the Communications and the English Departments take advantage of these publications to help train and educate students on the prospective job opportunities that can be found in these fields after graduation. Every year the student publications on campus are reaching new heights in journalism, design, and creativity, and both their influence and recognition continue to grow.

Vindagua

For more than 50 years the Vindagua has served as a record file of each years' events. The campus yearbook and is comprised of a team of editors, a support staff for writing and pictures, and a group of faculty members who sponsor and monitor the publication. Recently, the Vindagua received national recognition from the College Media Advisers. A panel of professional judges selected the 2001/2002 Vindagua yearbook as the first-place winner of the annual CMA Apple Awards for college yearbooks under 304 pages. With this being their first national award the Vindagua team is looking forward to continuing to win awards and bring national recognition to Lee University.

Lee Review

The Lee Review serves as an annual literary magazine that compiles the works of students, faculty, and staff in the fields of literature, sheet music, and the visual arts. It is the desires of the sponsors and staff to acknowledge the works of those who seek to glorify God with the gifts that He has provided them. The magazine seeks to present "through art the truth of an authentic Christian life, . . . life with heartache, questions, struggles, failures, victories, joy, happiness, answers, exuberance, lament, and fun," as is described on its opening page. The Review team was made up of a group of editors, a team of staff members, and a faculty sponsor (Dr. Sarah Kane).

Collegian

The Collegian, the on-campus biweekly newspaper had its 47th anniversary this year. The Collegian is set up much like the Vindagua, with a team of editors, a staff of writers, and a group of professors who sponsor the publication. In the past this team has won 1st, 2nd, and 3rd place prizes in national contests for page design and 3rd place for Photojournalism (color) Creativity. In the past year the Collegian has worked to incorporate more of the student opinion on campus into the paper. The "letters to the Editor" section has given students the opportunity to voice their opinions concerning both national and local news. For many decades students have received training from working with the Collegian that has helped them get placed in the professional world of journalism and design.

Lee Singers

Lee Singers is one of the oldest choirs on campus. They are directed by Dr. Walt Mauldin and travel all over the Southeastern United States three or four weekends a month. "The choir has a heart of worship. I wanted to be a part of a choir that is seeking God and His presence," commented Jessica Hale. The group varies their music and sings everything from classical songs to 'good ol' Church of God stuff' and has plans of traveling to New England this summer.

Evangelistic Singers (EVS) is a relatively new choir on campus. Directed by Lester Rector, EVS travels all over the nation praising God with a slightly more urban flare than the other choirs. They minister in churches that span many different denominations and in the past year have visited Washington D.C., Ohio, Maryland, Georgia, Florida and North Carolina. "I love EVS because I can just simply go and worship," commented Hannah Jarrad. With a powerful beginning behind them EVS is looking to leave a permanent impact in the lives of all those at Lee and throughout the country.

Ladies of Lee

Ladies of Lee is a traveling choir that is made up entirely of...you guessed it, ladies! Throughout the year this choir travels the Southern United States ministering primarily in churches. The group of 40 girls not only travels and minsters together, they also spend time building bonds of friendship during the week and during prayer and worship time. "I love Ladies of Lee because there is a powerful sense of unity among us, we're all real close," says Sara Newman.

Chorale

The Chorale is not your typical Church of God choir. Their music is very formal and includes classical works in many different languages such as: French, German, Italian and Latin. This choir does not travel, and makes Lee University its primary audience. "I like the different styles of music that we sing in Chorale, there is a real variety, everything from gospel to Mozart," commented Jessica Garrett. Lee University also sponsors a Children's Chorale which is an auditioned community choir of children ranging from 3rd grade to 8th grade. The young singers are from various public and private schools as well as the home-school community.

martin baldree

TOP RIGHT Baldree was known as an endearing professor and mentor.

When I think of Martin Baldree, I recall infectious laughter, creative instruction, long-term mentoring, interesting individuality, amusing clutter, dogged determination, dedicated gardening, devotion to family, staunch conservatism, Pentecostal heritage, balanced professionalism, unwavering hospitality, and lifestyle witness.

We who were his friends miss the unexpected visit, the invitation to lunch, the frank conversation, the joy of comradeship, the spiritual fellowship, the sharing of unremitting courage and determination in the face of debilitating illness, a sterling example of professional creativity and leadership, an entire generation of well-trained Directors of Christian Education, and a host of pleasant mental images (of sheer fun, beloved plants in the office and garden, friendly conversation, a strong, encouraging voice in the academic hallway, the heartening echo of a belly laugh in the distance, rapt attention to children, sensitive attention to art and music).

Some persons are so intent on conformity, success secularly defined, the lengthy professional vita, that they have little if any time for other people, for family, friends, children; Martin was the exact opposite. He achieved admirably, but defined success in spiritual rather than secular terms. The books he wrote had practical aims - to train teachers and ministers of religious education. His pursuits centered about work viewed as ministry, church seen as opportunity for worship and service, and family - his cherished wife, children, and grandchildren, but also family warmth extended to a variety of friends, professional and church associates, and lonely students. All these elements add up to spiritual, professional, and personal quality and - vitality; he brimful of life, and that life spilled over irresistibly into the lives of those who knew him, loved him, and worked with him. Very rarely will we see his likes again.

rachel sarchet

Lee University sadly said farewell to two beloved faces on campus – student Rachel Sarchet and Dr. Martin Baldree.

Rachel brought vi[illegible] she did at Lee, [illegible] leadership to class[illegible] SLC Sponsor Mike [illegible] it best when he said [illegible] about three things: chara[illegible] excellence.

As a Peer Instructor in English 105 Rachel touched the lives of the students in her labs, not only by helping them with papers, but through the wisdom she shared in devotions and personal interaction. Often she would focus on something she was reading or discussing with friends in her devotions, showing students a practical faith that brought God into the routines of daily life. Recognizing their need to form relationships as newcomers to the Lee community, Rachel invited her students to her home during the semester and spent time with them. Frequently she invented creative w[illegible] to teach grammatical con[illegible] including her version of the Datin[illegible] Game to teach comma rules by having the girls ask questions like "Using items in a series, tell me [illegible] things you like to do on a date."

Rachel was a member of Sigma Tau Delta, Lee's English honor society, and is grieved by fellow members who knew her as a dear friend, a scholar, and a respected peer. An English major, Rachel Sarchet planned to teach English, perhaps in a foreign country, and had completed ministry endeavors of this type, going to Croatia twice with Collegedale Presbyterian.

An experienced rafter, Rachel was injured when she was trapped in the swift current of the Ocoee River. Despite efforts at rescue, she was underwater for several minutes. Rachel fought her way back to consciousness over the next several months with the same determination and courage that had characterized all her endeavors at Lee. Those of us who knew her as a student and friend followed her progress anxiously and prayed for her recovery.

"As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways and my thoughts than your thoughts," God says in Isaiah 55:9. As Christians we struggle with the concept of suffering. We wonder why bad things happen to good people. Many of us who knew Rachel had that question brought home to us in a very particular way: Why would a tragedy like this happen to a Christian young woman so full of promise? Though we prayed for her complete recovery, God did not answer the way we wanted Him to. Nevertheless, He is still God, still Sovereign, still good. Our hearts feel the void created by the loss of Rachel Sarchet, but we are comforted by the knowledge that she is wholly restored in Heaven though not on earth.
